Whose Thoughts Are Yours? MIND CONTROL Is Not A Pretty Science!

We have covered the subject of mind control from so many different angles and so many different sources over the past ten years of writings from Commander Hatonn and others "in the know" that, to conserve space in our smaller papers during these days of austerity cutbacks, I was at first tempted to skip writing an introduction to the superb article you are about to read. But—mind control is too, too important a topic to treat casually. As an enterprise of awesome capabilities, mind control sits at the very foundation of all that has been inflicted upon a mostly unsuspecting mankind by those elite would-be kings whose aim it has ever been to control this planet.

I'm not referring here so much to the obvious control-byfear tactics that are the basis for the more recognizable methods of people control such as are embodied in everything from organized religions to what Madison Avenue persuades you to wear and eat and drive in order to be regarded as "cool" by the rest of us. Rather, it is much more important to call to your attention the very real nature of the more subtle, yet seemingly extraordinary methods of entering into your mind (actually, your brain) to

GENEVA CODEX BRIEFING

From THE NATURAL ACTIVIST, July/August 1997: [quoting]

In a late night session, the Codex Alimentarius Commission, 22nd Session, rejected the recommendations of the Codex Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Uses that would have advanced draft guidelines for minimum/maximum dosages. The Commission, in a victory for consumers worldwide, returned the proposed guidelines to Step 3, which means they will not be able to be finalized at Step 8 at the 1998 Bonn meeting of the Codex Committee.

The U.S. Delegation of Tom Billy (USDA), Fred Shank (FDA) and FDA staffers Dr. Elizabeth Yetly and Linda Horton were extremely supportive and proactive in advocating the interests of both concerned citizens and the dietary supplement industry who have opposed the developing Codex guidelines for nutritionals.

The bottom line of the Geneva meeting is that lobbying delegates is not the answer—educating delegates on the issues is the key to eroding support for the developing restrictive regulations, and to producing final Codex guidelines that support consumer freedom of choice in accessing dietary supplements.

Karl Reidel, National Nutritional Foods Association International Chair and John Cordero, executive director of Council For Responsible Nutrition attended the Geneva meeting on behalf of dietary supplement manufacturers and suppliers. Industry members should contact the associations for their reports.

Citizens' members may receive a report on the meeting by contacting the national office at (303) 417-0772, fax (303) 417 9378, e-mail <cfh@ares.csd.net>. [End quoting]
This shows, again, what can be done if enough people will stand up against the proponents of the New World Order (NWO) and their dictatorial methods. Keep up the pressures for freedom!!

CLINTON'S SCAMMING OF CALIFORNIA'S VOTERS

From PATRIOT FAX NETWORK, 10/6/97: [quoting]

Re: Civil Rights complaint with Jury Demand, CV-96-1166-TJH-AJW, U.S. District Court, Central District of California, Los Angeles. Frederick George Celani, Plaintiff, Box 3000—Unit "D" Anthony, MN-TX 88021. Pro se "OPERATION LASSO" Quoting:

113. A meeting was arranged in Little Rock between the plaintiff and Vincent Foster. Foster was called the "Rabbi" during the Lasso Operation. At the meeting the plaintiff was introduced to James Carville (who claimed to be Walter Hussman, a local newspaper publisher) and Betsy Wright of the Clinton Campaign.

114. The meeting revealed the fact that Bill Clinton desired to be the next president according to anointment by John Dingell. The plans laid that day were designed to deliver California for Clinton by casting the local politicians as inept fools, racists and bigots. The plan was so well executed that 60 people died for Clinton to gain the White House.

121. Bamaca is alleged to have sold some weapons without serial numbers in Austin to a gun dealer, who in turn provided needed cash. The guns were alleged to have been sold to a member of what was known as the Branch Davidians, a religious group, apparently interested in gun shows and weapons accessory manufacturing. An attempt was made to retrieve the guns through infiltration of the Branch Davidian compound by BATF. The bid failed and shortly thereafter a raid was staged in attempt to retrieve the weapons and a large loss of innocent life took place, commonly referred to as the WACO Massacre.

122. Word of Bamaca's exploits was passed on the pipeline to the Rabbi, Vincent Foster. Bamaca was ordered executed by Lasso agent Col. Julio Alpirez of the Guatemalan Army. Details of these events are contained in Harbury vs. CIA, Case no. 95CV1431, U.S. District Court, Washington, D.C.

127. Lasso was used to create the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) in Vienna, Virginia. All Lasso reports were transmitted directly to FinCEN. [End quoting]

Here's a few more pieces of the puzzle.

It's always interesting to view the pieces as they fall into place. It won't be long until enough pieces will be in place to trap all of the scumbag players and we'll watch them do themselves in trying to be the top scumbag.

GOP: KILL COMMERCE

From THE MODESTO BEE, 9/25/97: [quoting]

Republicans renewed their campaign Wednesday to kill the Commerce Department, calling it a critical test of their commitment to small government. Eliminating the Commerce Department, GOP leaders said, would be a way to show that, three years after taking over Congress, the party has not been co-opted by lobbyists and insiders. [End quoting]

Don't you like their reasoning for doing what they do? Always worried about their self-importance. Why don't they simply do something just because it's the right thing to do for "we the people"??

THE CHILDREN ARE THE GOVERNMENT'S MOST VALUABLE ASSET

From THE AMERICAN'S BULLETIN, by Stephen Ames, Jr., 10/97: [quoting]

You are probably going to find this article very disturbing.

This article is about probably the most disgusting crime that has ever taken place and continues each and every day. This article is about parents selling their children. Let us start off on April 9th, 1912 when the United States Inc. created the Children's Bureau in the Department of Commerce and Labor. This should have sent up a red flag, but obviously it did not. Let us skip ahead to 1921. Congress passed the Sheppard-Towner Maternity Act that created the United States birth registration area (see Public Law 97, 67th Congress, Session I, Chapter 135, 1921). This act allows you to register your children when they are born. When you do, you get a copy of the birth certificate. When you register your children, which is voluntary, they become Federal Children. When this takes place your children become subjects of Congress. A copy of the birth certificate is sent to the Department of Vital Statistics in the State in which they were born. The original birth certificate is sent to the Department of Commerce in New Columbia (the former District of Columbia) and then your child's future labor and properties are put up as collateral for the public debt. [Editor's note: I think the writer means the national debt which is phony.]

This is the first step in the government's [administrators of government] control and custody of your children. There are many court cases that state that the government has control and custody of the children (see Tiliman v Roberts, 108 So 62, 214 Ala 71. Nichols v Nichols Civ. App 247 SW 2d 143). The government has gained authority to have what you thought were your children raised and taught what they think is best for the children. You as a parent have no authority over the children. This is how incidents like the one in East Strousburg, Pennsylvania took place. The little girls were molested by the government [employees] because their parents gave them to the government [employees] to underwrite the public [national] debt. The children are nothing but mere cattle in the eyes of the government. [adulterations] The little girls in East Strousburg were inspected like a side of beef by a government inspector. My family has also suffered at the hands of the government [administrators]; my wife and I were accused of reading the Bible without training and believing the Constitution was still relevant. So the government administrators took our children.

I hope you can now understand how ridiculous people look in the eyes of the government officials when they complain about subjects such as Outcome Based Education. Most parents no longer have any legal standing to question the government on Legislation pertaining to children. You must understand that property does not have rights; only people have rights. The people better wake up and study the law, because if you do not understand the law you are a ward of the government also.

By the way, the United States is not a government, but is a private corporation and the states thereof are mere franchises (see 28 U.S.C. 3002-15). It only deals in Commerce and does so under private international law. So to complain to officers of a private international company about what they are doing with their property is ludicrous. We must be responsible for ourselves and our children. Does all of the above give you a new meaning to when Bill Clinton says, "Our children are our most valuable asset"?

I hope you understand that people are regulated because they are considered property of the New World Government. So if you are standing around waiting for the New World Order, it was here before you were born. There is much hope and a way out of this mess. It is by way of the law and procedure taught by Jesus Christ. [End quoting]

And we thought we were born into a free country under a Constitution which guaranteed that freedom??

ORGANIC GROWER BEGAN ENTIRELY BY ACCIDENT

From THE MODESTO BEE, 7/27/97: [quoting] WINTERS—Russell Lester finds organic farming good for business as well as the environment.

Lester grows 230 acres of certified organic walnuts. Much of the 400,000 pounds he expects to process and ship this year from his own crop, plus another 100 acres, will be sent to the Asian market.

"The market in Japan is really hot," Lester says. "All over the world, there is a demand for reduced chemicals or organics. I think for us, an emerging area really will be the Pacific Rim."

Lester says he quit spraying walnuts sort of by accident. The spray schedule "was out of sync" with his almonds.

"Come to find out, I didn't have many pests when I stopped spraying," he says. "I felt it was because of the softer usage of chemicals."

His crop's worm count was a low 1 percent without sprays, so Lester switched his orchard to organic and got certified in 1992. He says yields remain comparable to walnuts sprayed regularly.

Lester has embraced a whole host of biological techniques since his family sold their century-old fruit and walnut ranch in Santa Clara County and resettled near Winters in the early 1980s.

He uses cover crops as a host for beneficial insects which eat pests that could damage his nuts.

"We have thousands and thousands of employees out here to eat our bugs," Lester says of the beneficials. "So we've got to provide employee housing and food by keeping a cover crop."

Besides, the cover crop keeps the hard clay in one orchard from cracking, a cheaper solution than spreading gypsum at $200 an acre."

Lester also has a small chipping machine that grinds up limbs during pruning and blows tiny chips back onto the ground.

"There's lots of nutrients in these branches," he says.

"And recycling is better for both the air and ground than burning the prunings," he added.

"If you've ever seen anything grow on a burn pile, good luck; it's real toxic," Lester says. "Recycling puts it back where it goes back into the trees in a few years."

POND USEFUL

Ground water that irrigates his trees also gets recycled in a basin the size of a swimming pool at the lower end of his orchard.

A couple of innovative ideas are being tried around this pond.

Robert Bugg, a University of California entomologist, has planted nearly extinct trees and bushes that attract beneficial insects, particularly during seasons when ground cover is gone.

"The whole idea is to have a perennial insectary—something out there blooming for our employees (beneficial bugs) when there's nothing in the orchard," Lester explains.

His teen-age daughter, Jenny, is trying to expand the insectary by planting native grasses along the adjacent country road.

"I found ones that attracted the most beneficial insects," she says.

However, a Yolo County road crew spraying for weeds also sprayed Jenny's grasses, so she had to replant them.

"So far, they're doing all right, and we're getting some insects now," she says. "Dad is going to try to talk the county into not spraying that road area." [End quoting]

Sounds like an excellent idea for many other farmers to start doing. Won't it be a surprise when they find out the chemical path is actually less productive than the organic path—except for lining the pockets of the elite chemical companies.

JUDGE CHANGES TUNE

From THE MODESTO BEE, 10/2/97: [quoting] A federal judge agreed Wednesday to stop telling potential jurors it is all right if they had changed their minds about the Oklahoma City bombing, after defense attorneys warned that he might be biasing the panel. Michael Tigar, Terry Nichols' lead attorney, said a major part of this case is that "a lot of witnesses have changed their stories often" about the April 1995 bombing. U.S. district Judge Richard Matsch had been telling prospective jurors that there's nothing wrong with changing their views on the case from the ones they provided on questionnaires. Tigar said that suggests to jurors that "it's OK" for a witness to change his story. [End quoting]

The fact that the potential jurors are asked to state their feelings about the case before they can become a juror makes the trial a sham.

STUDENTS' CHEM LAB MISTAKE IS GONNA MAKE 'EM MILLIONS

From THE NATIONAL ENQUIRER, 9/30/97: [quoting]

Two students blew up their high school chemistry lab—and now are on their way to making millions!

Justin White and Gus Gray were trying to create some gooey slime for use on Halloween. With their teacher's permission, they worked on it in school, and spent two days attempting to get just the right consistency. But then it boiled over and blew up in the lab.

They cleaned up the place—but missed a container holding residue from a different experiment.

Some of their slime landed in that container, combined with the other ingredients and created a batches—peppermint, vanilla, maple and cinnamon—and their new goo caught on as a popular snack at their school.

A typical all-American high school kid, Gus said: "I think it's pretty neat. I've always liked science but I never before thought about going into science. If we make a lot of money from this, I'd love to buy a Hummer automobile. If I make a million bucks, the Hummer is mine—with a huge stereo!"

Added his excited codiscoverer Justin: "If we make millions, I want to buy a new Corvette."

IT'S THE WEIRDEST STUFF IN THE WORLD

The boys' protein-based gelatin slime can be made into a very thin film that wiggles in your hand, but also:

- * It doesn't dissolve in water, but it does with saliva.

- * It sticks to paper, stainless steel and even Teflon.

- * Flavored with peppermint, vanilla, maple or cinnamon, it can be eaten like candy.

- * It can also be made into a thick sheet that is brittle like glass—and can be tinted. [End quoting]

Very interesting product. What do you think will happen once the Elite get it under their control?

SCIENTISTS TRACKING FLU THAT KILLED MILLIONS

From THE ORANGE COUNTY REGISTER, 10/4/97: [quoting]

A Canadian-led research team is hoping a tiny graveyard on a remote Norwegian island may hold the secret to a deadly flu virus that revaged the globe 80 years ago, killing tens of millions of people.

The team will fly to Norway this month to probe the graves of seven young miners who succumbed to the so-called Spanish flu in the autumn of 1918.

They hope the bodies—buried in the small mining town of Longyearbyen, north of the Arctic Circle—still hold traces of the lethal virus and can provide clues to fighting future epidemics. [End quoting]

The research team might think they are going to help mankind by doing this, but I venture to say that the Elite controllers will make sure they multiply this virus to attempt to kill billions this time instead of the measly millions in 1918.

Somehow, while they are "playing around" in their labs, an accident will happen and some of these viruses will escape and: "Sorry folks, there's nothing we can do!" Be sure you get your flu shots—which will be loaded with some other or even more of the same viruses or bugs.

I'm sure most CONTACT readers already know what to expect from this type of research.

NETANYAHU DEFENDS FAILED ASSASSINATION

Excerpted from THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, 10/7/97: [quoting]

Prime minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Monday defended the costly Israeli assassination attempt against a Hamas leader as a setback in a "just and vital fight" against terrorism, making no apology and defiantly vowing to carry on. [End quoting] wonder substance with amazing properties.

The boys' new protein-based slime is edible and malleable—and companies are lining up to talk to the young Edisons.

Experts with NASA, DuPont and the Capsugel company are very interested—and the delighted youngsters are having their invention patented.

Raphael Ottenbrite, a polymer chemist at Virginia Commonwealth University, told The ENQUIRER: "The experience for these two boys is worth more than whatever money they'll make—and that could be millions!"

Their thrilled chemistry teacher, Holly Hash of Bluestone Senior High School in Skipworth, Va., noted that the youngsters' creation "has many different properties that are unusual, and you can eat it like candy. It's wild!"

The boys added a variety of flavors to some least world leaders don't usually admit openly that they assassinate their enemies. This is a sign of the times that is saying "anything is alright to get what you want". Most wise people knew this was going on all the time, but Natanyahu's action shows how brazen the Elite have become and are thumbing their noses at the rest of us.

LET GOODNESS TAKE ITS PLACE

Excerpts from Larry Mercurieff speech.
Larry is an Aleut from St. Paul Island (Bering Sea).

From the INTERNET, 10/97: [quoting]

What the Hopi, Maori wanted us to know here in Alaska and all the villages, is that we are moving into the—what they call the World of the 5th Hoop. The Navajo called it moving into the 5th World. Maybe, amongst some of the elders of the Athabascan people there are similar things that are being said about this time. It is a message of hope...

They say that moving into this time, of the World of the 5th Hoop, is a time when all the four sacred powers are going to be reconnected. They are the red-white-black-yellow. They wanted me to know that among the Hopi they are the keepers of the sacred stone tablets in Tibet, in the mountains kept by the Tibetan Monks. In the same way that the Tibetans have their sacred stone tablet with the Hopi.

There are four sacred stone tablets that were given. The sacred black color has theirs in a small village in Africa. They cannot exchange it with the sacred white color because they lost theirs. But the Hopi wisdom keepers say that they are soon to find this stone. Very soon in this time. If you look at the maps where the people of Hopi live and Tibetans live is exactly on opposite parts of the world of Mother Earth. The Hopi word for love is the Tibetan word for hate. And the Tibetan word for love is the Hopi word for hate. The same word but exactly opposite meanings. They say that this is necessary to help keep the balance of Mother Earth. And that there are keepers of this balance that are around the world like us.

In moving into this time of the 5th Hoop it is going to be a time of great healing. There is going to be great healing that is going to start and the Hopi say that it is going to start in the North. I have learned just recently that it is going to start in Alaska.

The signs of this time of healing that is to start are: When the children bring back the spirit to the village. When the young start speaking with the wisdom of the elders. When the leadership energies start shifting to the feminine side. When this hoop of 100 eagle feathers get completed. And when the White Bison shows up. These are all the signs of the movement from the 4th to the 5th Hoop.

Now, I know that some of this is in language that you may have not heard in your lifetime. But I know inside, you will recognize these words to be true. Your intuition is going to tell you what I am saying is true. The world for the last 4,000 or so years has been stuck in the male energy side. The male energy is thinking from the brain. It is a management from the top down. It is more aggressive. It does not use intuition from the heart. It is a different kind of energy. It is not a bad energy. It is just different than the female energy. Female energy is healing, nurturing, loving, caring, touching, sharing and that the world spiritual leaders know that these energies have been male and now have shifted to the female side.

The wisdom keepers say that the only place to find the power of the Creator is to be present in the moment. If we have fears we are projecting them into the future. Into a future time that does not even exist. If we have guilt, we are living in the past, for the past things we did, we are not living now. All the spiritual keepers, of all groups in the world, be they Buddhist, be they Islamic, be it part Red Pack, be it medicine pack, you name it, say the only way to find the power that has been given to us from the Creator is to be here, now. Not to escape...

The spiritual keepers also say that the first step towards healing yourself before you can heal others or help heal others is to love that which we may hate or who we may hate. We may hate ourselves. We may hate an organization. We may hate the people from outside who have interfered. We may hate somebody. The first step towards this healing is to stop the hate and turn it into love. And it will transform everything. This spiritual sickness that we have is going to move now. It is going to change. There are some predictions in the sacred stone tablets among the wisdom keepers about what is going to happen here in this world of the 5th Hoop. Not only are we going to have this healing but the Earth Mother is going to shake in a way it has never shook before. It is going to move in a way it has never moved before. There's going to be a lot of fear because of this and the wisdom keepers want me to convey that when this happens, we should not be afraid because what is happening is that the Earth Mother is trying to help us remove the stuff that we have stuck in our bodies, inherited from the spiritual sickness of generations and generations out, and one of the ways that we do that is to scare the life out of us. This is why there is going to be time for healers.

...The Dalai Lama went down to Yukutan during the last change of the moon with all the spiritual leaders to pray for this time of the shift, this time of healing. And he has chosen and this is the words that they use which are hard to understand. He has chosen to take the spiritual energies that they have been keeping in Tibet and move them from Tibet and bring them here to Alaska. Which they did a few weeks ago. The reason they did this is because the Chinese are wiping out the Tibetan Monks and destroying all the temples. So the Dalai Lama moved its spiritual energies here to Alaska because this is the place where the healing is going to start. And this is the place where all the Angels are coming by hosts...[End quoting]

Sounds as though time is growing very short for the dark ones.

HILLARY'S MAFIA RELATIVES

From the INTERNET, 10/97: [quoting]

Hillary Rodham (Clinton) is related to three crime families, including John Gotti. [End quoting]

It wouldn't surprise me. Cathy O'Brien stated that Gerald Ford was involved with the crime families of Michigan as a pornography dealer and President Reagan was involved with child molestation and other slimy acts of crime. President Johnson—I was told by a friend from his part of Texas—had control of the crime and corruption of his area of Texas. It seems that this is the type of first families we need until we learn our lessons the hard way.

DA CLEARS ATTORNEY IN MENENDEZ CASE

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, 10/2/97: [quoting]

Defense attorney Leslie Abramson will not face a formal criminal investigation for asking a psychiatrist to delete material from his notes during the trial of Erik Menendez, the District Attorney's Office said.

"We've reviewed the relevant transcripts and have concluded that this office should not investigate this matter," said district attorney spokeswoman Sandi Gibbons.

The probe focused on Dr. William Vicary's revelation during the penalty phase for Erik and Lyle Menendez that Abramson ordered the defense psychiatrist to alter his notes which may have included incriminatory evidence.

Abramson has denied any wrongdoing. [End quoting]

She's obviously a good Khazarian attorney and no doubt takes her Kol Nidre oath every year. Their time is coming—and soon!!

SEEN AT A STOP SIGN

"Is the child trying to tell me something?" I wondered.

From ANGELS ON EARTH, May/June 1997, Guideposts, 39 Seminary Hill Rd., Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

Finally, it was the phone call I'd been waiting for. My oldest son, Tom, and his wife, Michele, had just brought my first grandchild into the world, a baby girl named Brittany. Mother and daughter were doing fine, Tom said, but my son sounded exhausted. He was starting a new business and hadn't gotten enough sleep for weeks. I'd been helping him get organized and he asked if I'd spend the morning at his office. Tom would call his father at work and we would all meet at the hospital at noon. May 19, 1994, I thought. A day to remember.

I happily rushed around getting dressed, but something in Tom's voice had set off an alarm. I guess you could call it mother's intuition, and I searched for the reason for my uneasiness. Certainly everyone was healthy. And I knew how much Tom had wanted a girl.

On the five-mile trip to Tom's office I decided to avoid the usual bottleneck on the main road. The back way curved through scenic countryside, which suited my soaring spirits. At a stop sign I pulled up behind another car. In the backseat was a little girl smiling and waving at me. She had a very happy face, but her features told me she had Down's Syndrome. I waved to her.

As I continued on my way, the uneasiness I felt after talking to Tom returned. "Lord, please take away this nagging worry so I can be completely happy about my new granddaughter."

At the next stop sign I pulled up behind the same car. The child again gave me a big wave, and at each succeeding stop sign for the next five miles, I found myself waiting behind that car. Every time, the little girl smiled her happy smile and waved her big wave. Is the child trying to tell me something? I wondered. But I dismissed the thought.

Michele's parents met us at the hospital at noon. We bought balloons in the gift shop then headed excitedly for the maternity floor. We found the young couple holding a miniature version of her mommy.

"We have something to tell you." Michele said quietly.

"Brittany has Down's Syndrome," said Tom.

In the three years that Brittany has been with us, her cheerful personality and eagerness to learn have brought us the kind of joy we could never have imagined in those difficult first days. But I shouldn't be surprised at her ability to capture our hearts. After all, I'd been stopped on the way to the hospital that May morning and given a glimpse of what was to come. [End quoting]

We never know in what form God will send his messages and blessings.

Little Crow Speaks At August Gathering

[Part V And Conclusion In A Series]

Editor's note: The following concludes the transcription (Part IV was in the 9/30/97 CONTACT) of Little Crow addressing those gathered for several days in Tehachapi during this year's Mountain Festival (tapes available from The Word: 8/16/97 to 8/19/97, New Year Celebration meeting tapes). Little Crow's words offer insight and often humorous respite in these difficult times of challenges and changes all around.

Little Crow: Some question of real substance. Way in the back.

Audience: Is the Black community—how do the Indian people view the Black community? I'm not trying to make it a racial question, but that's something that I hear a lot. From some of my friends and my people, and I would like to hear what your thoughts are.

Little Crow: If you could tell me again what it is you hear a lot, because I don't want to make a comment on what I think I heard. I would like to hear—could you just use the mike there, then I'll be sure and hear you.

Audience: Well that Black people and the aboriginal Indians/original Americans, they are more—they have a lot of an ethnic base to them and, as an example, using "brother" and "sister".

And there are a lot of comments about how the spirituality that seems to be more ingrained in their daily lives as opposed to other people's—not saying that other people aren't as spiritual—it just seems that Blacks, and Indians, and other Aboriginals seem to express it more. And I was wondering what your thoughts are.

Little Crow: OK. I get the question; I don't understand it, I just get it. (laughter) We live in a very exciting culture/civilization. It's a divisive civilization, it's one that fractionalizes people, and place, and things, and context. Again this is, regardless of how we look at it, it does pick sides. It creates sides. And some of the most racist people I've ever met are Indian people; my own people, back on my own reservations, are very racist, very bigoted. More recently one out of one of our well-known tribal families, Liman Redcloud, said, "We shouldn't be praying for White people. The Pope doesn't pray for us, so why should we pray for White people? And we shouldn't let other people come up, and there should be no Black people Sundancing; and this isn't their way, this isn't what they're about." And I thought that was very narrow of Liman; but that's Liman's privilege, his right to say whatever he wants to as a human being, but he needs to be accountable for it.

The affinity that we have with Aboriginal people—use that term. Aboriginal for me used to mean, in context, used to be those people from Australia, the Aborigines. And as I got a little bit smarter, and I used that on my context, when I began to remember a little bit more, then I remembered that we are all Aboriginals. All of us here. You are all from an Aboriginal base, tribal group, and yet, one time your tribal group was Nature centered. What we share is oppression. And groups of people that are oppressed and coming together can recognize the oppression and there is an immediate affinity. Now to say all Indians get along with Black people, and all Black people get along with Indians: it would be a misnomer to say that, and you realize that. But, when we are immersed in a situation such as we have here today, and there are very few faces of color, we have a tendency to clone, to pull together, to connect, and to relate.

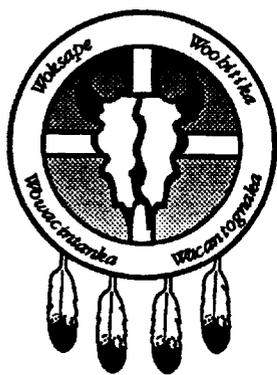

If you know my history, I grew up in the Black community in Omaha, Nebraska. I grew up in what they call the Black ghetto, in Omaha. And so I have an affinity for blackness and Black people, Black culture. I don't say I understand, because I'm not an expert in it, but I lived within it, and survived within it—and day to day as a young man, as a young child. And so I have that affinity of Black community. I know what community is from that perspective. I grew up in the new northside. Bob Gibson is my dearest friend. I "caught" him as a young man; we played ball together. He's my best friend, yet I didn't always agree with a lot of things that Bob said, but we were looking at it from different perspectives. He was looking at it as a Black man, abused in major-league sports and I was looking at it as a Native American who was abused by the culture in other ways. And so we had this affinity.

Yes, community is very, very strong in the Black culture, because you had to have that community and that [ability to] pull together. And one of the saddest things to happen to the Black community was the invention of the freeway. When the freeway was invented it allowed the White community to circumvent the Black community, therefore not go to the economic centers and businesses within the Black community but to go out to the malls, and the supermarkets and the strip-malls that were out and away from the Black community. So you had a deterioration of an economic base and a tax base, and so the Black community sort of sunk a little lower, and wasn't able to provide the services and so the stores went out of business and the community had signs of deterioration. Stores closed up because the super malls were offered, and pretty soon we were even going out, ourselves, to these places. So, the freeway: an insidious devise. Not to increase our building to transportation, but to cut off and to red-line, and to cut off into districts and areas and to shut down the flow of economics, so that people would still be dependent on "certain kinds of banks" to go get their money to and pay more interest, and pay more this, or be denied altogether. So, yeah, I have an affinity with the oppression that has been experienced by the Black people that were brought here against their will and were sold into slavery by their own people in many areas, in many cases. It wasn't just an Arab walking down the street and, seeing somebody, taking them off the street. It was their own people taking prisoners and selling them as slaves to slavers, and slavers bringing them to this country. And so there was a lot of that—and we do the same thing here, in different ways, forms and fashions.

Yes, when we talk about community, when we talk about terminology, I use "brother" and "sister"; I use "human being", I try not to relate too much to color anymore. I don't want to say "White culture", "Brown culture", "Yellow culture"; I say "human beings". And that's what we are. We're human beings even before we were that. In my language, that word "dakota" means ally/human being. And that's why we initially identified ourselves as human beings. So it's in that context that, in interacting with anyone of an ethnicity or different color, I emphasize our humanness, and that as human beings we can treat each other with respect. You know, with respect and dignity, it doesn't have anything to do with the color. But because we still live a time where we live, I instantly ally with people of color because I know the struggle. I'm in the struggle, I'm a survivor of the struggle, I'm a survivor of genocide, I'm a survivor of the restriction and reduction of my ability to practice my religion constitutionally. I am not vested in the Constitution, I am not under the Constitution, I am referred to only twice in the Constitution. It does not have anything to do with my religious freedom—and congressionally, even today there were laws, twice, that were signed into law by Congress that I couldn't practice my religion and anyone who did would be imprisoned and as a result all the food that was due to us—in those days we were rationed food—and all that would be withheld. The same thing we do to mothers on welfare. "If you don't adhere, or copped out, or don't tell where the husband is, or the father, we will hold your food stamps or we'll take you off welfare; we'll take your check away. Let me tell you, you've got to cooperate, you've got to not do this." And so on and so forth.

So, I know what that is, but I try not to use it in any other way than that; that we are human beings. But again—and I'm using this message as I go throughout the world with everyone—we are all related. You are my brother and you are my sister. We are connected. He is my brother, she is my sister, that's my nephew there, and that's my nephew back there. And you're my sister, and you're my brother, and it doesn't have anything to do with anything else. We've got to get there and part of my responsibility is to be just that off-beat. To be that much off-beat, different, revolutionary about it, even among my own "people". I hate that because it's a—what do you call those things, you know?

Audience: It's an oxymoron.

Little Crow: Yes, an oxymoron. Who's a moron? (laughter)

Audience: Yes, I've come to some of those same conclusions that you've come to and, but does it get—do you have any special tricks or anything to help to—because there are a lot of Black people that don't see it that way. And it's so hard to try to talk to them and convince them of looking at people as a whole, rather than "this group of people did this to us," and "this group of people did this to them".

Little Crow: Yes.

Audience: But once you get past that I've found that you really have some very loving, caring people. So, I just wanted to comment on that and thank you for your insight.

Little Crow: Thank you for the question. Yes, ma'am?

Audience: I think from my experience, and the people that I've talked to, that Black people feel that they have to work twice as hard, or harder, to be half as good, and I think that's where a lot of the root problems exist. Feeling the Oneness and the connectedness that we're all feeling here today, which is a really beautiful thing—I have a concern for anyone who, no matter what the color is, may not feel that. How do you get past that? And it's harder for some, easier for others.

Little Crow: We live in a world that makes it that way, that it's been acceptable for so long and that's part of the "good ole way". How I get past it is recognizing. How I get past it is paying attention to the suggestion of my parents, who said "Become a master of the language, and in becoming a master of language you will understand what people are saying to you, even when they don't say it." And realizing what they are saying you are allowed to then prepare yourself, or to respond in such a way that respects yourself and gives you the respect that you need in order to deal with it. There is a class structure; there has always been a class structure. There is a privilege that comes in this particular place, and many other places, and I don't say that's right, I say those are the things—that's how it is, and we have to find a way in which to circumvent it and work around it. Understanding the language has been my thing: what has helped me to become articulate. To understand a language, to realize what one is saying in an insidious way, in a snide way, in a insulting way and yet not being insulting, in a demeaning way and yet not being demeaning. And what I usually used to do was give it back. Give it back to them. But that took a lot of time and energy, and so I just considered the source and I know you've heard that, "just consider the source", and "sticks and stones will break my bones, but names will never hurt me". Well they do hurt; they do hurt.

And I've spent a lot time talking with couples of mixed marriages, and I'd say, "It's fine for you because you can get married and you've got each other, but your child is going to suffer. They're going to suffer growing up, being a result of a mixed marriage where they don't look exactly this, and they don't look exactly that. And they're going to suffer in such a way that you've never suffered. And you have to consider having children and putting them through that. And you have to realize what they're going through in their psyche, as they grow up in a world that is still racist, and prejudiced, and bigoted." It still is.

Audience: I'd like to—I didn't mean to cut you off.

Little Crow: That's OK.

Audience: I'd like to also give thanks to people here, because groups like this—I know this is not a group, but I don't have the words (laughter), gathering maybe.

Little Crow: Yes.

Audience (a Black gentleman, present with his wife): And this is such a great place to come to because we don't feel any racial differences, or anything, I feel embarrassed to bring up the question. We're sitting over here going back and forth, "Should we talk about this?" "No." "Let's talk about it in private." "No, but these are our friends and family, we should..."

Another audience member: Wait a minute, are they Black? (laughter)

Audience: Right. See that's the things that are...

Another audience member: Are we breathing their air? (laughter)

Audience: Certainly we can. And it, like, it'd be so much easier if I could just get the people to come up here, but I couldn't—I have a hard time to get them to come to my place to talk about this stuff, but if they were to come up here they would see this and...

Little Crow: I have the same problem.

Audience: Yes.

Little Crow: I have a hard time getting Indians to come. I can get White people to come (laughter). I can get Black people to come, I can get Asian people to come, but I can't get Indians to come. And I know that problem, but to put your mind at ease—did you hear me say that I was the oldest son?

Audience: Yes.

Little Crow: Of four boys, and they all looked like me. Now what's that tell you about my Mother and Father? All right. Thank you.

Audience: Thank you.

Little Crow: Yes, we breathe the air.

Audience: There's seven Rainbow Masters, which one are you?

Little Crow: Neither. I don't—that was, let's see. Where was I when that happened? (laughter) No, I was in another life then, I'm sure. I'm sure I was. I'm none of that; I'm all of it and I'm none of it. As you are. You are a Rainbow Master, you're a healer, you're a shaman, you're a priest, you're everything. You're everything.

Knock on wood, I got a call the other day from the Pretender show and they're going to be doing a segment on "Indians". And they were looking for a teepee, of course. (laughter) But, it may be an opportunity. I love that show, because of what it says in the very beginning, there are those among us who have the capacity and ability to be anything they want to be. Anything they want to be, and that's each and every one of you. You have the capacity to be anything you want to be, and you are "pretenders". If you pretend you are the victim, then you're the victim. If you pretend you're the abuser, then you are the abuser. If you pretend you're the sacred light, you're the scared light. It's up to—it's what you want your story to be. It's what you want to be, what pretender you want to be, and what it is you want to accomplish by pretending. This time you're Black, last time you were White, the time before that you were Asian. This time you're a male, you were a female. Two lives before that you were bisexual. Three lives before that I was a lady, a woman. You know, we're pretenders, so let's pretend. Let's pretend we are strong, and we are powerful, and we are unified, and we have the power to make a difference.

One person, and we are all one, we're all one here, and yet we are different. We just look different, we are in different form, different shape, but we are all the same. You are my relatives. Mother/Father/Creator made us; when isn't important, and for how long isn't important. We have gone through a time of sticks and stones, where we were throwing rocks and beating each other over the heads. We've walked through times of tremendous wars and destruction, and now we're coming into a time of peace and harmony and balance. You know, it's been prophesied, it's been told to you that it would come. Now let's make it real. Let it begin with you! Let it begin inside of your heart! Let it begin inside your mind! You may not be able to convince one other person, but if you believe it then that's all it takes. If you believe it, then it's real! If you believe it then it's happened! If you believe it then that's all there is! You have accomplished what you've come to do. You've gained faith. Faith in something you can't prove, faith in something you can't see. And that's the joke.

Audience: You can feel it.

Little Crow: You are it. Not only do you feel it, you are it. You become it.

I want to thank you for allowing me to come up and share with you at this time, and take these minutes to be with you, which rolled into maybe 45 or 50. I want to thank you for allowing me to come here today and be a part of this very significant time—when we first got together a long time ago and began to talk about things, as they were and as they were going to be. I know there was a lot of laughter back there at that time, but it's come to pass.

And I wish you all, all the love and compassion and balance you can squeeze into your life. But you are the determiner of how much that will be, not me. I can put it out there and you can breathe it in, but you'll be the only one who determines how to use it. And so, I want to thank you on behalf of my family, my grandchildren, my children, and all the people who support me on a daily basis, and my publisher, Connie. She drove up here; she's my eyes, so to speak, drove me this way, and I appreciate her strength and support, also. And for Doris and E.J., and the Commander, and all of you, and for David, coming this way from where all of you all come from. How humbled I am to be here with you today. I just want to say thank you very much. Pelamo mashteya [phonetic spelling]. (applause)

Secondly. I do not need to consult your father or anyone else for "accuracy" on Vietnam POW/MIAs. I belong to over 20 veteran organizations and have attended every major event and congressional hearing on this issue in the last decade. My personal photo and data bank on POW/MIAs is the largest outside the U.S. Government. I am a decorated Vietnam combat veteran and a former analyst on Vietnam for the National Security Agency. I am recognized by Senator John McCain (R-AZ) as one of the five most notorious POW/MIA activists in America today.

Thirdly, it is incomprehensible to me that you would have the temerity and the audacity to write me a letter using the words honor and respect in connection with the war in Vietnam in view of the non-participation of you and all your brothers in that war and the shabby treatment and relegation to second-class citizens given Vietnam Veterans by the People of Texas in general and your office in particular.

Dear Mr. Jordan:

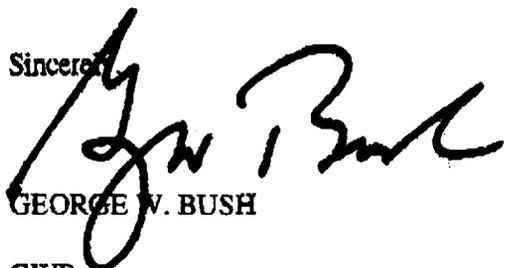

I received a copy of your letter to the Houston Chronicle.

raid on the camp without higher approval but chose not to.

(2) On Jan. 1st, 1994, our group led a protest at the "Mobil Cotton Bowl". Mobil was the first large U.S. Corporation to come out of the closet and advocate normalization for Hanoi. We were evicted from the State Fairgrounds by jack-booted thugs of the DPD. There is a marble statue on the grounds with the names of the 144 POW/MIAs from Texas. The mother of a POW/MIA in our group was told she would be arrested if she went to see her son's name instead of immediately leaving the fairgrounds.

(3) At President Bush's last speech in office at Texas A&M, a mother of a POW/MIA stood up and said, "What about my son?". She was detained by jack-booted thugs of the Secret Service.

(4) September 19th was POW/MIA Recognition Day. The black POW flag was ordered flown at the White House, all federal buildings and 42 State Capitols. Governor Bush SPECIFICALLY PROHIBITED the flag from being flown in Texas. This caused State Senator Jerry Patterson (Texas A&M, USMC Fighter Pilot & Nam Vet) to become enraged and enter legislation mandating the flying of the flag.

And people wonder why Vietnam Veterans feel alienated! When I came home in uniform in 1969, I was spit on by hippies in California. Men I served with who were last seen alive in the hands of the enemy were abandoned by the U.S. Government and betrayed by the American people. Today we have draft-dodging cowards like Governor Bush and President Clinton living in elegant mansions and getting schlepped around in bullet-proof stretch limos at taxpayer expense while the men who did their fighting for them struggle to make ends meet, while our service and sacrifice to our country goes unrewarded and unappreciated and our missing brothers are forgotten. In further correspondence with me, Governor, please refrain from using the words duty, honor, country and respect as those words are beyond your ability to comprehend.

Boo! Are You Scared Of Another '87 Crash?

beat, with talk of a "new era" in the economy that justified high stock prices.

Boo! On Oct. 19, 1987, a day now immortalized as "Black Monday", the Dow suffered its worst crash ever. Its 22.6 per-cent, 508-point drop wiped out more than $500 billion in stock values.

Creepy Part

Here's the really creepy part.

The summer of 1997 was a great one for the stock market, with the Dow in August closing above 8000 for the first time ever. The index is a little below its August high now, and it has been experiencing some crazy 100-point swings, partly because of program trading.

Stock prices are just as high now, relative to company earnings, as they were in October 1987. There's talk of a "new paradigm" in the economy that supports the high prices.

The nation is more vulnerable to the impact of a stock-market slide than it was 10 years ago. Not counting retirement accounts such as 401(k) plans, which are stuffed with stock

Editor's note: The following article is from the 10/9/97 issue of The Montreal Gazette. It bears repeating since the clues worldwide at this time act as dire warnings of what may easily take place at any moment now in the over-inflated world stock markets, especially as banks (like the premier bank in Japan) continue to fail. This article appeared just one day after Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan issued his latest outrageous warning that a stagnant economy is actually a happy economy. Sure!

10/9/97 SUSAN HARRIGAN
Newsday

NEW YORK—Here's a scary story for Halloween.

Ten years ago this month, the stock market had just finished a terrific summer. The Dow Jones industrial average had dropped since its August peak, and it was experiencing some crazy up and down swings, partly because of large blocks of stock. But the mood was up-

October's Memorable Market Meltdowns

October is traditionally the month when Wall St. had been at its worst. Here's a look at four of the most memorable market drops:

Oct. 28-29, 1929

The economy was booming up until the Great Crash, which really was several crashes. But that economy existed only for the wealthiest Americans, who invested heavily in luxury items and stocks and promulgated the image of the 1920s as an era of "easy money". In fact, America's farms were already in a sort of depression, mortgage debt was soaring, and wages and consumption were stagnant. In short, the stock market was outracing the general economy. The Dow fell 12.8 per cent on Oct. 28, 11.7 per cent on Oct. 29 and 9.9 per cent on Nov. 6, in panic selling partly engendered by the practice of buying stocks on credit. After November, the Dow rallied a bit, and then began a slide that didn't hit bottom until July 1932. Recovery had to wait for World War II.

October 1973-74

Everything seemed to go wrong at once: inflation was soaring, as were interest rates. In October, the Arab oil embargo that followed the Yom Kippur war—a conflict between Israel and Egypt and Syria—sent gasoline price through the roof. The Dow dropped 40 per cent between October 1973 and October 1974. The Dow was trading around 950 in September 1973 and it wasn't until late 1982 that it broke through the 1000 mark to stay—a runup that ended on Oct. 19, 1987.

October 19, 1987

Black Monday came amid a seemingly strong economy. But fears of an imminent recession and rising interest rates sparked the Oct. 19 market decline, the biggest one-day percentage drop in the Dow—22.6 per cent, or 508.32 points. The market was already jittery, and that worsened when U.S. Treasury secretary James A. Baker III threatened to allow a further weakening of the dollar in response to higher German interest rates. New Federal Reserve chairman Alan Greenspan held off a bigger decline by making clear the Fed stood ready to pump money into the economy. Stocks began recovering the next day, and the Dow ended 1987 about where it began the year.

October 1990

Another oil crisis of sorts was behind this market drop. Oil prices shot up starting in August 1990, when Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait. The price of a barrel of crude oil broke $40 for the first time ever, and the Dow dropped about 19 per cent from July through October. Hussein wasn't solely to blame for Wall St.'s woes; Congress and president George Bush bickered over how to cut $600 million from the budget deficit, which kept interest rates high. But Hussein's imminent defeat was all it took to hit the market on Jan. 17, the day after the first successful air attacks on Iraq, the Dow responded with a 114-point (4.5 per cent) rise, its second largest to that point.

mutual funds, U.S. households have 50.4 per cent of their financial assets invested in equities, compared with less than 35 per cent in 1987, said Martin Barnes, managing editor of The Bank Credit Analyst, a monthly publication based in Montreal.

"The household sector's financial position is much more leveraged to the stock market, and if there's a market dive, people's net worth will be hit pretty hard," Barnes said. A crash could injure the economy by causing a "negative wealth effect", or a downturn in spending by consumers who feel poorer, he said.

As the 10th anniversary of the October 1987 crash approaches, there appear to be many reasons to wonder whether a decline on the order of Black Monday's—which would amount today to a one-day loss of more than 1,800 points on the Dow—could happen again.

A minority of experts say history could indeed repeat itself because of a number of potential problems they see in the market, particularly an explosion in the use of derivatives. Such investments, perhaps the best known of which are futures and options, are risky when used improperly. They can be purchased for extremely low down payments relative to stocks, are difficult to understand and control the movements of huge blocks of equities.

But the majority of experts believe it is highly unlikely that another crash as severe as the one in 1987 could occur in the foreseeable future. They say the U.S. economy is much healthier than it was 10 years ago, and that several structural and technological changes have been made in the markets to prevent another one-day meltdown.

"The parallels (between the 1987 and 1997 markets) are almost eerie, but the underlying forces are different," said John L. Manley Jr., an equity strategist for Smith Barney Inc. in Manhattan who recently studied the difference in forces affecting the market then and now. "Stocks are rising now, but there's much better reason for them to be doing well."

Reason For Optimism

One reason for optimism at the moment is interest rates which are lower today than they were in 1987. Rising interest rates weaken the stock market by dampening corporate profits and making fixed-income investments, such as bonds, more attractive buys than stocks.

"Every bear market in this century has been preceded by a dramatic rise in interest rates," said James Bianco, director of research for Arbor Trading Group in Barrington, Ill. (Bianco is not a bull, however; he believes the rising stock market already is increasing consumer spending, and that will eventually cause interest rates to rise.)

McCain Lies About Being Tortured As A P.O.W.

From: NATIONAL VIETNAM P.O.W. STRIKE FORCE

To: CBS News, 10/12/97

You did not do your homework well enough on "Hanoi John" McCain. If you had read the lengthy article about him in the April 1973 issue of U.S. News and World Report, you would have seen that in none of his quotes did he allege torture, except from the irate civilians at the scene of his crash. Once in captivity, he lived in relative splendor compared to his hapless cohorts who refused to denounce America on the radio and paid for their patriotism in blood, literally. Here are some other facts your sloppy journalism omitted:

(1) USAF Major Overly could not have cared for McCain's "wounds" for very long; he collaborated and accepted early release in less than five months from shutdown.

(2) Another of McCain's roommates "disappeared" and was not released at Homecoming I. McCain was kept in the camp for "progressives" (collaborators) and away from "reactionaries" (John Wayne types who spit in the face of their torturers). Other roommates were Day and Flynn, both of whom made propaganda broadcasts along with McCain urging pilots to return to carriers and soldiers to surrender.

(3) McCain returned from communist captivity 10 pounds heavier.

(4) Patricia O'Grady, daughter of a POW/MIA, on a visit to Hanoi to look for her father, was given a tour of the "Hanoi Hilton" prison. They showed her McCain's cell. It had a writing desk, a large bed, a goldfish bowl, a flush toilet and a nice view of downtown Hanoi out the window.

(5) Both North Vietnamese Generals Giap and Bui Tin met with McCain in his cell. No other returned POWs reported meeting with high-ranking generals. I have a picture of McCain enjoying a large plate of food while talking to a Soviet KGB officer in the Foreign Ministry. A Soviet doctor was rushed to Hanoi to treat his wounds.

(6) In personal conversations I have had with General Bui Tin, he assured me they never touched McCain, saying that since he was the son of the CINCPACFLT Admiral, "He too important".

(7) McCain said in 1973, he sustained his ordeal with his "love for his wife". In a matter of months he had dumped her for a woman 1/3rd his age whose father owned the Coors Beer franchise in Phoenix. (His good friend Senator Kerry, about the same time, dumped his wife after fornicating with Jane Fonda.) McCain also has a secret "wife" in Hanoi and an illegitimate son.

(8) McCain would sit beside NVN army officers at a table when newly-captured pilots arrived and urged them to cooperate.

(9) McCain viciously fought against the formation of the Senate Select Committee on POW/MIA and then got on it and sabotaged any hopes of finding real answers. He called me and others crooks profiteering on the issue, yet he is the biggest loot recipient of the Keating Five.

(10) If the "Crowned Prince" of the "Plantation" does not stop his outlandish lies about his "torture", several of his fellow POW's "will" soon break their "code of silence". McCain is a brainwashed Manchurian candidate who has fawningly supported Hanoi and the Communist Bloc countries ever since he entered congress. The man is a liar, a traitor and a crook. Any senator who uses the word "scumbag" 20 times a day addressing his employees is not fit to serve.

Also, CBS, you went on to a segment of a Latino who was on death row (wrongfully) in a "miscarriage of justice". The biggest "MOJ" of this decade would be for traitor and Hanoi-lover McCain to continue in office after the 1998 elections.

Our Mandate Is Victory

(from a letter to Brother Joseph)

10/7/97 Leroy Michael,
Schweitzer Special Prosecutor

Out of the blue, a jail guard asked two of our people at two separate units, "What is going to happen to them now?"—so you know they have been told that we won our case!

And the fact that the case against me in U.S.D.C. district of Minnesota, Third Division was dismissed. It was brought by private parties concerning a warrant I had given them. Also, a banker in Indiana where our liens were discussed and there was talk of 'pooling' funds to pay the liens. We caught the whole rotten bag of fish. Now the payback is hell!

Clinton is not making nominations to fill federal judge vacancies. Why?

It seems here is a supreme court justice out west who proved an executive branch officer cannot select a judicial branch officer! Who would have thought only an Elector can vote in our judicial branch of government. This is the real meaning of the separation of powers doctrine. No 'agent' of ours can select our principle! All agents courts are voluntary! We are exclusive! It had its origin in Deuteronomy. We are that court of first and last resort—now appealable.

Our Three-Justice courts are in bench (banc). So a Title 11 bankruptcy is our chancery division over the agents U.S. Trustees. Any docket by our Creditors creates an automatic stay on all legislative assembly-created courts. This is well covered in the D.C. Court Rules. Everything is reorganization (bankruptcy) as in federal common law (U.C.C.).

Do you see why we set up private security agreements under U.C.C. 1-105 & 1-103? The doctrine of law of the place controls simple contract. Parties' power to choose applicable law, territorial application of the act.

When you docket your claim in bankruptcy it means a Creditor's claim—not the debtor in an insolvency petition. So all federal judges become respondent under conflict of financial interest. This is the reason for the automatic stay! Then our special panel is the only one who could hear the matter under law of the place in our foreign countries. It becomes exparte all the way. We won—the trustees lost.

You must get a copy of the D.C. Court rules to see our "exclusive" court. It is not federal! Its origin is local government (traditional). They refer to this in the rules. We create an admission panel to screen all attorneys. They (panel) have absolute immunity! Their actions are non-appeal-able. We supersede the appellate Supreme Court in D.C.

The D.C. crowd knows what we have discovered and they are now caught for treason if they fail to obey our edicts. They never had authority to send federal judges into our several States. Our impeachments are valid and cannot be overcome. Any denial of three-justice panel is denial of access to our venue in supreme court. This is why it is the defendant's prerogative to retain his venue. A denial would nullify your right of religion. Also, it would deny you equal right of suffrage.

We are just now getting the system to realize they are culpable for willful acts of treason by suppressing our right to access our judicial branch of government.

This is why the three-justice panel was put back onto Montana codes Annotated at 2-2-144. It was not in the 1993 edition.

The State Bar Associations were knowingly pulling these guarantees out of the codes to promote their plans for overthrow of our Republican Form of Government.

We have the proof and will prosecute the liars/lawyers until our Nation is restored. This information is spreading out across the land. Our right of self-governing is begin restored slowly but surely. The corporation tribunals are exposed.

Our People must learn the importance of our judicial conference of the United States (of America) as found in Title 28, U.S.C. SS 331-335, Chapter 15—conferences and Councils of judges. This was not done by the so-called Common Law Courts and they had no evidence of their lawful office. Without that, they had no real judicial immunity to counteract the prosecution against them.

We must make public our three-justice panel with proper oath and bond. This will be the new Republic from ground zero.

Where are all the good and lawful men? Gone to prison every one?

May the power and protection of our Creator rest upon you as we totally destroy the evil tyrants in our Nation. A-Men!

L.M.—Special Prosecutor in "other circuit".

MIND CONTROL

Is Not A Pretty Science!

control your moods, your health, and the very thoughts you thought were your own thinking. Never mind the crooks-in-high-places of surveillance breaking into your home or office computer; worry about them breaking into your head!

Our super-vigilant News Desk editor, Dr. Al Overholt, brought this article to my attention from an Internet source and, upon reading, it quickly became clear that this should be more widely shared. Who knows just how long such a well-grounded discussion as this will be allowed to remain in that public Internet-access domain!

To quickly put just the technical side of mind control into perspective for a moment, let us go back to the July 2, 1996 issue of CONTACT, wherein our Front Page story was titled "Talk About Fancy Gadgets! Covert Operations Of The National Security Agency". That article was a doozy. We presented a most astounding outlay of high-tech mind-control machinery that probably few of even our regular readers were ready to comprehend, much less accept—even though most are used to digesting everything from the reality of an Intergalactic Space Command and the Hollywood-fabricated unreality of much of our supposed space programs, to human clones and replicas parading amongst us. Even though I thought I knew a healthy amount about this subject, I remember being outraged from what I learned about how advanced and invasive the technology had actually become.

That article's information was in the context of a lawsuit filed against the National Security Agency. It revealed, as Commander Hatonn said at the time, "...a frightening array of technologies and programs designed to keep tabs on you individuals." Boy, was THAT a colossal understatement!

The article presented here, while quite technical in some respects (which actually only helps to lend validity to the information being discussed), nevertheless provides valuable insights into some of the "how" of advanced "electrical" mind-control methods. (I use the term electrical in quotation marks because what is actually being employed is so far advanced from what is allowed in the electrical engineering text books—courtesy of those same elite would-be kings who control the world of education, too—that most practicing engineers and scientists are unaware of such phenomena, and thus label it nonsense. The Earth is flat, don't you know!)

The ramifications of these technical behavior-manipulation techniques span quite a range of New World Order controls over not just we-the-people, but even Mother Earth herself, as Geophysical Commander Soltec has alluded to in many of his lessons over the past many years. Of course, there WILL be repercussions that these would-be kings will NOT be able to control, and the time is fast approaching for the reaping of the "rewards" for such incompetent and unconscionable tamperings on many fronts.

One point brought out in this article to call to your attention right up front is the "beauty" of how the growing mobile cellular telephone system has been integrated into the overall behavior-modification and surveillance agendas. And that sleight-of-hand maneuver is surpassed only by the skill with which—once again—"they" have gotten US to carry most of the expense to build our own entrapment web! (If you have a mobile phone, how about those outrageous charges for making or receiving even the shortest and simplest of calls in "peak" hours—which are being redefined lately, in most areas, to include everything except possibly a 15-minute window around 3 in the morning!)

Another point: In the article we are about to present, you will note mention of The Phoenix Project—words identical to what is prominently displayed in our CONTACT masthead. So, are these the same? Hardly!

Longtime readers of CONTACT will immediately recall how often Commander Hatonn has warned about the elite's longtime usurpation of important Lighted Project names for labeling their own diabolical undertakings. Over the years, we have called to your attention a number of perverted operations called "Phoenix Project" as this is an umbrella code-name for an entire division of New World Order mischief related to mind control.

For example, since the article you are about to read refers to the "Montauk Phoenix Project", I refer back to Commander Hatonn's 1/4/95 parenthetical comments, in the middle of an outlay on upcoming engineered mind-control spectacles and some who are "under the spell" of very specific mind control agendas, wherein he said: "Many of these people have been trained right through the Montauk Phoenix Project, Monarch Project (as Delta Force), and are led around by their handlers."

The only correction (or maybe the better word is addition) that I would make to this composite interview article concerns the power of Light Shielding, or "calling in The Light", in a prayerful manner, for protection. This is a matter which many Teachers and Wayshowers of the Lighted Brotherhood have urged, over and over again, that we do on a regular basis—with each breath, if necessary.

The subject is "talked around", in an indirect way, in the article below, but is not specifically recognized or noted or urged as a protective technique. And yet, after reading about the shenanigans underway by the elite would-be kings, you'll quickly appreciate WHY this procedure has been so emphatically and frequently suggested by Commander Hatonn (and others of the Lighted Brotherhood of Teachers and Wayshowers) to be so important. Now would definitely NOT be a good time to let down your guard or get sloppy about this matter!

Basically there are two avenues which can help one to ward off the effects of the "nasty rays" we are being hit with. The first is simply to be aware of what is going on—as the old adage "forewarned is forearmed" conveys. (And that is THE value in sharing this article with you at this time.) Then, the second line of defense is, as stated above, sincerely and prayerfully "calling in The Light" (or calling upon God and His Hosts) for protection. The call ALWAYS compels the answer—in this case, help and protection.

I will end this discussion with a comment from a 4/7/93 writing by Commander Hatonn that appeared in the Introduction to Journal #66 called Ultimate Psychopolitics, Mass Mind Control & The Global Control System. In that writing he asked the rhetorical question about the current deplorable condition of life on planet Earth: How did you get to here? And then he said: "You got to here through the most massive and comprehensive of human replication, psychopolitical interactions, microwave harassment and mind control. It goes far beyond the old idea of 'brain washing', for these things are now used against you IN MASS!"

Read on—and find out a bit of what he meant by that UNDER-statement of the facts!

CONVERSATIONS WITH RESEARCHERS ON MIND CONTROL

10/18/97 INTERNET

The following is an extract from a taped interview with several researchers in the general area of mind control. It has never been published before. The interview, like many others that have been done, is done in an open question-and-answer format to protect the identities of the parties:

X: Let's move along to things that are psychoactive in nature and things that people should know about.

Y: We now have discussed the early Phoenix Project. In about 1969 they wrote the final report for Phoenix I. In that report it stated that "since we now have studied the electromagnetic effects on human beings, we believe it is now possible to influence the way people think with electromagnetics." Of course when Congress read the report, they hit the ceiling, saying essentially, "We don't want you doing this"! Congress was afraid that someone would use this technology to control them. They said, in effect, "No, don't do this." The people who wanted to continue this went to the military and said, in effect, "We can make you a nice little-weapon that will make the enemy lay down their arms." How many people believe that the military doesn't want this? The military then offered them the use of the old base at Montauk [Long Island]. Then came Phoenix II and the Montauk Project. Let's review that. They had three steps in the project. The first step in the project was something I like to call the "microwave oven" step. They wanted to see what the output of the multigigawatt transmitter would have on human beings in front of it. They took subjects and sat them in where they could be focused on and threw the switch. Of course, the subjects were cooked. We don't know how many people they killed this way, but we do know there were a lot of them. Finally, someone got the idea: "Hey, we don't want the burning rays, we want the non-hertzian rays." They turned the antenna around and they aimed the gain horn through the reflector at the target person. Now they were getting somewhere. They were able to direct mood control from a distance by ELF modulating the transmitter and changing the mood.

This was a great success. Someone then came to them from the US Government and told them that they would provide them with sensors that would pick up thoughts directly from a person's mind. So, they brought the system of sensors and installed them in a chair. This is the famous Montauk chair.

What they did then is they connected the output of the sensors to computers that would decode the sensors output into a digital code that represented the thought patterns. Those went to another computer which would store the thought patterns and to another computer which would generate the pulse modulations that went out the antenna. What they had actually built was a mind amplifier.

X: What would they do with this chair?

Y: They would take a subject and train him so that his conscious mind would be diverted to the "serpent in the Kundalini". The primitive mind would come up to the surface—they would blank that out and put into his primitive mind a concept that he would concentrate on. The concept would be picked by the sensors and transmitted out of the antenna. This was the second phase of Montauk. They were targeting whole populations and individuals. The subject could think of squelching electrical activity and all activity would stop where they focused the antenna.

X: What else were they able to do?

Y: They were able to change the way in which the animals in the area were moving. Once, they programmed the animals to charge out of the woods into the town. They changed the way birds flew, fish swam and a dozen other things. They could take the crime statistics in Montauk and run it up and down like a yo-yo. They programmed crime waves for one period where they would occur, for four hours each night for a week. This drove the police crazy. There was one time, according to the Montauk police, when all the kids descended on the beach—all the kids in town. Two or three hours later, the kids all left the beach in mass unison. Another time, all the residents of the town decided to drive up to the state park. When asked, some of them said that it seemed like a "good thing to do".

X: So what they had developed was...

Y: They developed wholly-operational mind control. Based upon the effect that they had to cancel out the fields at the chair, which was located underground, they noticed that conceptual effects would happen out of synch with real time. They realized that they had the capability of bending time. At that point, conferences were held to discuss how they would modify the equipment to more effectively bend time. They developed something called a Delta-T antenna. It consisted of three loops describing a delta-function; it was referred to as the pyramid antenna. It essentially was three magnetic pickups/transmitters at right angles to each other, three orthogonal loops. Orthorotation is, of course, how you get access to hyperspace. It means you have tensor stress orthorotations. If you drive the three parts of the antenna correctly, you get what is essentially a space-time portal in the center. The antenna looks like a pyramid with an inverted pyramid on top.

X: Could you go into the operation of the chair a little more?

Y: Yes. The output of the chair went into a Cray computer that would decode the digital representation of the thoughtform. That drove the IBM computer and the output from that went into the AIL computer...

X: AIL? Is that the Airborne Instrument Labs?

Y: Yes. The AIL computer generated the pulse modulation. It was a frequency-hopping signal source. It would change frequencies in a matter of nano-seconds. There were five synchro-dyne amplifier stages, cascaded. Each one had a separate pulse modulator. The final input was the amplatron, which had a big pulse modulator.

X: How did this thing work?

Y: They would take a portion of the thoughtform and put it into the first stage, and pulse the first stage on and load it into the second stage, etc. After the fifth stage it would go into the IPA's, be pulsed again and then into the amplatron, which would be pulsed and then the signal would go into the above-ground antenna. Each time the signal would go from stage to stage, more complex information would be put into the thoughtform that was being cycled through. What does all this remind us of? The radiosonde. This is essentially a big radiosonde.

X: How did they figure the time aspect into all of this?

Y: They used the delta-t antenna, which was situated underground immediately under the christmas-tree antenna on top of the building. The chair was located underground between the delta-t antenna and the above-ground antenna. The delta-t generated time-stress tensors which were coupled with the electric field to generate the full time tensor control. It was great. They had a working time machine. They used twistor and spinor fields in order to form a portal. They could go anywhere in space-time, and they used it once to get access to the underground facilities on Mars.

X: To Mars? How did that work?

Y: First, the subject projected himself psychically through space to Mars. They set the computers to solidify the vortex between Montauk and the point on Mars and the vortex would be established. They only needed to do it once, because they taped it and could then run the tape to establish the vortex. There was a project called Project Phobos, part of which was concerned with the investigation of the underground caverns. There were other project initiatives that had to do with a defense posture for the solar system. It was a directive of the people in command at Montauk to physically and psychically approach this defense mechanism, in order to find a way to turn the system off. It was done. If it were turned back on, the system would in effect become more "conscious" and able to reject outside intrusion.

X: I'm not sure I understand what you are really talking about with all this—does it have anything to do with the planetary grid?

Y: Yes, to a degree. There are planetary-grid nodes on almost every military base. What we're talking about with the Earth is "putting the Earth to sleep" in order to prevent any geological changes of any great magnitude from occurring. We're pumping signals into the grid points, which you might compare to human chakras. It is mind control, in a way, that is also being done to the planetary mind of the Earth.

X: What has happened since the Montauk Project crashed in 1983?

Y: Well, after the Montauk Project was discovered and ITT was taken apart, the government didn't leave it alone. They left ELF alone and they moved up to VLF through HF today. HF is 3-30MHz, MF is 300KHZ to 3Mhz, and VLF is 3KHZ to 300KHZ. If you tune across these spectrums, you are going to hear all sorts of pulse modulated signals that sound like the old Montauk signals. You'll hear signals similar but not identical to the Soviet woodpecker signals; you'll hear video buzzes on these bands—they don't have synch or chromo references on them. On VLF, you can tune into 15.75KHZ horizontal rate and you hear phase modulation. I have receiving equipment that has dispersive IF filters that convert phase modulation to amplitude modulation so I can hear it. All your TV networks—the National Bureau of Standards (NBS) supplies free-of-charge the reference frequency to all TV stations. This is what they phase modulate. Does anyone believe the government gives anything away for nothing? I just discovered that this is part of the videodrome system. I have been tracking this for quite a while and wondered what it was. If you tune up to 31.4 KHz, which is twice the horizontal rate, and up to other multiples of the horizontal rate, you'll find other carriers which are similar to video but don't have the synch information accompanying them; they correlate to the horizontal rate and the phase modulation. In the Long Island area, these carriers are coming from the state parks. There are Tittle VLF transmitter sites in the state parks; they are all run from satellite. We had psychics check this out on their level and they came up with the information that this VLF was in effect a softening-up procedure to make the public susceptible to other mind-control experiments.

The "American Buzzsaw" is the US equivalent of the Russian woodpecker signal. This a psychoactive signal which is designed to interface with the mind of the human being by way of the mind-brain connection. The government has been quite active, designing systems that are carried by helicopter, systems that sit on the ground like the buzzsaw transmitters, etc. I first picked up the buzzsaw signal about 1990. I called the FCC and asked them if they knew what it was. They said it was the American version of the over-the-horizon radar. I said, "You mean like the Russian woodpecker signal?" They said, "Yes." So they admitted that it had the same purpose. This signal is broadcast on multiple carriers. The carriers hop from one frequency to another, anywhere in the range from 4MHz to 30MHz. It is never on the ham band or the international broadcast band. It is only on the allocated frequencies that the government shares with other communication services. With the switching of these frequencies, they are creating what is known as a Levinson Transform, named after Norman Levinson, who generated the mathematics for frequency-time transformations. This is highly significant, since the human brain, body and mind work on time-dependent pulsations and frequencies which are time encoded. You have this unusual pulse modulated signal hopping around from frequency to frequency to frequency. They have a multiple transmitter. The signals only come in phase at a targeted site. This signal, we believe, has three modes. The first mode is the search-mode. This is where they transmit a signal and then a psychically sensitive human being picks up the signal and sends something back. They can in this way identify these people and where they are. The second mode is the general transmission of a psychic-interrupt function which interrupts psychic activity. That's all it does. It has a tendency to lower the overall psychic awareness of the population. Maybe one out of three people responds to this signal. A good psychic can easily screen this mode out of their consciousness. The third mode is where they target an individual, and we have known six people who have been targeted. They can lock-on to the resonance of the synthetic material in your clothing and target you from that. We have a clearing device which uses the equivalent of a white-noise magnetic field to break up the magnetic matrix in objects in order to clear any psychic signatures or stored solitons in the object.

We put this device on the clothing, and you could hear the timing of the buzz-saw changing. It got more and more distorted, and then disappeared for a while; it then came back in on the search mode. This is telling me that it is an interactive signal. Also, if I scan up and down the band, it will find my receiver and lock-in on that receiver. They are looking for a changing dynamic function. This must be how they key-in the search mode. As I tune the receiver from high to low, it is sending out a phase conjugate function that they are picking up.

X: How can an individual know if they are being controlled through the use of electronics?

Y: Well, if there was a process being impinged on a person that embodied a higher intelligence than the person had, at a higher power level than the person manifested, you could say that he was under control. There could be emotional or physical indication that something was "out of order".

Typically, we all know when something is wrong. You have to be in touch with how you operate in a normal manner in order to distinguish when something abnormal is going on. You have to have a high order of awareness in order to recognize when an attempt is being made to violate your mind. Understanding how it works is probably your best defense against this, at this point. We have no shield, per se, no real way to jam it, but understanding does limit its effect by allowing you to "plug the holes" in your mentality. A technological device that would block it would have to go above the wave-order that embodies the human being. It would have to be a unified-field-type of device in order to be above the orthogonal rotations in hyperspace that they are using to transmit the effect. If you can personally operate within those higher orders, in consciousness, you can control what is going on around you, barring the use of a technological device. Another aspect is that if you operate "outside of time" in consciousness, then time-dependent hyperspatial pulsed modulations would have little or no effect. The people that are perpetrating this stuff want you to be unaware—that's why they're sending out the buzz-saw signals. The awareness that it is going on is by all means a major step.

X: How about the use of subliminals in the environment?

Y: There are doors to different levels within the "subconscious" areas of the mind that are keyed-in by the focus of attention and the integration of emotion. For instance, the third and fourth level of the subconscious involves sexuality. Advertising and media focus on this subject which should not be an area of focus. It is a "jumping off point" to get into the mind.

X: Are these "searching functions" directed toward specific areas, or do they cover the entire country? Is there somewhere you could go to establish a safe reference point?

Y: Well, from the way I have heard it, there are at least five multi-megawatt transmitters propagating these buzz-saw signals. There are also many local transmitters all over the country. These large transmitters could probably reach anywhere in the world. The American buzz-saw signal is mostly hertzian, and I believe it is affecting the magnetic field relative to the person more than the psyche, so magnetic shielding modes should be a step in the right direction. If you live deep underground, you probably would not even pick the signal up.

X: How deep would that have to be?

Y: Probably a mile-or-so underground would be enough. If you lived in a ring of mountains, they might not find you. See, this is not a time-stress that they are playing with. They don't need special equipment to do this now.

X: What do you mean?

Y: They need no more than the UHF cellular telephone frequency, which is now being installed everywhere, to do it. The human cranium resonates within the frequencies covered by cellular telephone continuous wave transmissions. The cellular system nationwide is connected to a computer system in Boulder, Colorado. We are very suspicious about what other capabilities that system has, since it is pulse modulated. That is not a relativistic signal—it is a hertzian in-domain type signal and it affects the physical.

We suspect that they may be using the cellular telephone receivers to pick up the return signal from the buzz-saw. We have heard buzz-saw-like signals on the cellular telephone network that correspond in frequency-switch-timing in the same way that the buzz-saw signals do. There is a definite connection between cellular telephones and the buzz-saw signal. And this is "over-the-horizon radar" that connects to cellular telephones? Come on, "Who's kidding who here?"

X: How do the grid points interface with this technology?

Y: The grid vortex was initially used as an extension of the antenna structure. That's all it was used for—for the mind-control part of Montauk.

X: What size grid nodes would you need for this. There are grid lines about every 1.5 feet.

Y: You have different kinds of grid nodes. The Hartman lines are every 1.5 feet. The military bases are built on the large nodes where the lines repeat about every 15-to-20 miles.

X: Other than this electromagnetic pulsing, what other technologies are you hearing about that may be in this category?

Y: Well, the so-called videodrome signals on television. There is so much going on that could be involved.

X: Would you amplify a little on what you said about the resonance of the human cranium?

Y: There is research that shows that the human cranium resonates at about 850MHz. This seems to vary from about 830MHz to 890MHz. The cellular system is designed to operate right in that range. The cellular system operates from about 840MHz to 890MHz. It is pulse-amplitude modulated and pulsed-angle modulated.

X: Angle. That would be phase.

Y: Right. You have regular analog modulation as well. When your portable cellular system is ON, it's in constant communication with the cell site. The set that you are carrying is telling the cell site where you are. When you get to the edge of the cell site it transfers you over to another cell site. They can also use this to track the people as well.

X: Is that the only way to track?

Y: It is conceivable that they could track a person by the ringing within the cranial cavity. I do not know if they can do that yet. It is theoretically possible. Each person's cranium should "ring" with a different resonant signature.

X: What about the interface with this central computer for the cellular system. Could you go into more detail about that?

Y: The cellular system involves their use of a person they dub a "roamer", which is a person who roams the country with a cellular transceiver. He has to be able to hand over from cell site to cell site as he travels. The only way a roamer can operate over the entire country is for the system to be tied into a central computer that keeps track of everything.

X: What about the so-called independent cellular companies?

Y: They are tied in. They have to be able to go on to long distance lines.

X: Do you think that these independent companies are also in bed with AT&T—involved with mind control?

Y: Of course. They have to be. They are part of the network and they are all linked electronically.

X: Is this all controlled by the military?

Y: Sure. From what I understand, the master computer for the cellular system is in Boulder, Colorado. I don't think I have to tell you what else is in Boulder.

X: The center of the buzz-saw.

Y: Yes. That gives you the government connection. In fact, I believe that the central cellular computer is in the same building with the National Bureau of Standards.

X: Oh, my God. What more can you tell me about this videodrome signal?

Y: Well, about 6 cycles away from the signal is the harmonic of the power lines. I think that is your reference.

X: Is it pulse or phase modulated?

Y: It appears to be phase modulated.

X: Have you been able to de-modulate this videodrome signal?

Y: Yes. It's coming right over the television at people.

X: Most of the instrumentation in electronics is constructed to measure a charge coupled to mass—the "real" component of the signal. How do you go about measuring the complex conjugate component of the signal which is psychoactive—the relativistic portion of the signal.

Y: That's not an easy task to do. The only way I know to measure such a signal is by measuring through the zero-point potential using an old-style regenerative receiver as a detector, because then you have the positron-electron pairs coupling through the vacuum and your relativistic functions will affect the coupling between the positron-electron pairs.

X: Is there a practical test that someone without access to a lot of instrumentation can use?

Y: Essentially, you can use any detector system. But all the detectors other than the regenerative type require a correlated hertzian function in order to pump the detector for it to detect the non-hertzian component or function. This is what makes a vacuum tube short wave receiver not fade the way others do. Its detecting the non-hertzian function, but not directly. If you move the hertzian part of the signal completely, your receiver just drops out to complete distortion because all you're getting is the delta pulses that come through the Dirac sea into the receiver. A regenerative detector can integrate those Dirac pulses into a usable function. If you had a white-noise source pump, a diode, you could hear the modulations in the white-noise source. The problem is, how are you going to hear a delta pulse on the speaker in the audio amp? You have to somehow cross-feed the delta pulse to give you something that is usable.

Bakersfield Business Conference Of Elites

10/15/97 RAY BILGER

It is October the 11th. The year is 1997. Never have so many been so deceived by so few for so much of their very lives and future. Indeed, that statement may well reflect the very state of our so-called modern society on this planet at this most critical crossroads to our destiny.

With all the decadence and opulence that marked the Roman Empire just prior to its collapse in 476 A.D., the 13th Annual Bakersfield Business Conference (of the Elite) got underway in one of America's preeminent Satanic Capitals, Bakersfield, California, on the campus of Cal State University. Sprawled across acres of the campus was all of the gourmet food, drinks and entertainment the Elite would want to have to celebrate their incredible achievements in controlling the world. Even the porta-potties were super high-class with soap dispensers and running water.

I attended this exercise in opulent outdoor social interaction as a media representative of CONTACT. This year's conference featured such notables as George and Barbara Bush, William Bennett, Gen. Colin Powell, Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, Jack Kemp, Rep. Dick Armey, Rep. Bill Tauzin, Larry King, Rush Limbaugh, Paul Harvey, Jay Leno, Rich Little and others.

Mario Cuomo reportedly couldn't be there because of a case of the flu. He was to have had a debate with William Bennett. No matter. Mario's absence provided Bill Bennett with a convenient forum to espouse his ever-so-articulate doublespeak-solutions for correcting America's ills and problems.

When I checked-in at the Press Tent, I was given a folder and packet of information on the Conference, and I also received a complimentary hard-cover copy of Bill Bennett's newest book, Our Sacred Honor, a compilation of (cleverly selected) stories, letters, poems and speeches from America's Founders. This man, Bill Bennett, is one of the cleverest manipulators in the New World Order. He is currently a co-director of Empower America (along with Jack Kemp, Jeane Kirkpatrick, Vin Weber, and Lamar Alexander), an organization dedicated to promoting "conservative" principles and ideas.

Regular readers of CONTACT will be aware of the fact that it is actually people like Bill Bennett who are at the very heart of America's problems. For instance, Bennett made no mention that he had been a mind-control programmer for some time prior to his brother (Bob Bennett) and himself sexually assaulting Cathy O'Brien and her daughter, Kelly, at Bohemian Grove in Northern California in 1986. Kelly was only six years old at the time. This hardly makes Bill and Bob Bennett, paragons of example of what is best for our nation.

Nor did Bill Bennett mention in his speech at Bakersfield that he had worked deep underground at N.A.S.A.'s Goddard Space Flight Center mind-control lab, near D.C., programming Cathy O'Brien to help him implement Education 2000. This was while Bill Bennett was Secretary Of Education under Ronald Reagan. It is important to note that Education 2000 is "designed to increase our children's learning capacity while destroying their ability to critically think for themselves". (See the book, Educating for the New World Order, by B.K. Eakman, pub. by Halcyon House.)

In the Introduction to Bill Bennett's new book, he notes that the Founders had learned that republics are destroyed "by vice and decadence". Bennett seems to be doing his best to practice both of those and thereby ensure that the American Republic is destroyed. Nowhere in the 413 pages of his book do we find the text of the Constitution of the United States of America!

Comedian Rich Little lightened things up a bit. It is interesting how the scheduling of such a Conference is arranged, with powerful mind-control messages interspersed with light, mindless comedy. Rich Little commented on the poor state of our economy (remember, we're always told how good it is) by saying, "The only way a family of four can survive today is by eating a family of five." Sick or ironic—or maybe simply ahead of the action? In the coming lean times of the Earth Changes, things may well devolve in some places to the point of such depraved actions as are joked about here.

Rich Little could well have been the keynote speaker of the Conference. His imitations of the presidents had more truth in them than what the presidents themselves would ever tell us.

Paul Harvey pointed out to us that "noise makes news". He said that the recent press coverage of the death of Princess Diana outdid the coverage done during World War II. One got the sense from Paul's comments that he (probably along with most other people) knows that something is very wrong with what is going on in the world, but he (again, probably like most people) doesn't seem to be able to put his finger on exactly what it is. It stares us in the face but we mostly don't see it. The problems of the world appear to be represented by those who were the most prominent speakers at the very conference Paul was attending. Again, it stares us in the face but we just don't see it—or if we thought we saw, we don't believe such could be.

Rush Limbaugh (a.k.a. "Mush Windbag") "entertained" the apparently Republican-sponsored Conference with his same old boring rhetoric, where he tries to convince us that the real problems in America are due to the liberal Democrats, as if there were actually two functioning political parties. His oversimplification of a problem which is really rooted in money, power, the greed for both, and a total lack of morality, is worthy of no more mention than this.

George and Barbara Bush made their appearance at the Conference in mid-afternoon. Barbara spoke first and generally told us what a great man her husband is. She did not tell us whether or not George is still a pedophile. She did not mention George's extensive involvement in the child prostitution and pornography business (after all, this was a business conference), which is well documented in the book The Franklin Cover-up, by John W. DeCamp, pub. by AWT, Inc., Lincoln, Nebraska.

Nor did Barbara mention George's violent sexual assaults on Cathy O'Brien's daughter Kelly, which are well documented (along with lots more incriminating information) in the book Trance-Formation of America, by Cathy O'Brien and Mark Phillips.

And, Barbara didn't tell us that George is, and has been, heavily involved in cocaine trafficking through his Zapata off-shore oil-drilling rigs and production platforms. She could have at least told us which model clone of George we would be listening to, but then, as probably a clone herself, she would not necessarily have been programmed with that data for the day's pageant.

Then George Bush himself spoke, and he told us how great Barbara is. He did not mention the fact that he stole an old, extremely valuable gold certificate (vintage 1875, worth trillions upon trillions of dollars) from a little old lady (Vina K. Durham), after killing her husband (Russell Herman) for it, and that he then used funds illegally obtained by using that certificate to further implement his plans for the New World Order as well as for personal/family enrichment.

George Bush did tell us about his great "accomplishments" during the four years of his presidency. He also told us how wonderful it was to work with such great men as William Bennett (his pedophile buddy). George concluded by saying, in part: (quoting)

...(T)he challenge before us then is to secure the peace and to make good on the promise of this post-cold-war era.... I believe that American leadership is an indispensable part of that equation....

...(W)e must lead with integrity, and we must lead with clarity of purpose. And to do that, our word of honor must be good. (end quoting)

Given what we know about the disgusting activities George Bush has been, and is, involved with, which are destroying America, and given the fact that he does not let the general public in on what he is really up to, then, when George says "our word of honor must be good", it becomes obvious that his word of honor is just another perversion of language consistent with his skills as a politician. It depends on just who he happens to be talking to at the time. I see no honor in George Bush or Bill Bennett!

Let's face it, folks, we have an only thinly concealed pedophile government in place in Washington, D.C., from our President and our Attorney General and heads of Congress on down the line, and it is destroying America like a festering, cancerous growth. As well, we have other pedophile governments around the world, and such an amoral element in our world society is actually in place running our world. Morality is an antiquated term to these sorry ones, only resurrected and spoken about when necessary to reinforce the lie to the people!

Back at the Conference, there always seems to be a topic that is mentioned in discussion by most of the speakers, which usually reflects what the media is currently trying to cram down our throats. Consistent with our Front Page story this week, this is simply another way we are mind-controlled "en masse" to think a certain way and thus be distracted from thinking about what is really happening to us.

In 1993, for example, everyone at the conference was talking about N.A.F.T.A. (North American Free Trade Agreement), which did pass in Congress, even though Congress received phone calls from all over America overwhelmingly against its passage. After N.A.F.T.A. passed, even more of the few remaining industrial jobs in the U.S. went south to Mexico. The normal media crams these things down our throats whether we want them or not. They are lap dogs of the mind-control agenda, not watch dogs for a free-thinking society.

Anyway, this year, one of the main topics of conversation was the income tax and the I.R.S. In the news recently, we have seen where the I.R.S. has been called to task before Congress for their "criminal" activities. At this year's conference, there was a debate between Rep. Dick Arme, who was strongly supporting a flat tax instead of the thousands of pages of I.R.S. tax laws, and Rep. Bill Tauzin, who supports a national sales tax in place of an income tax.

To show you just how determined these guys are to give this to us whether we want it or not, Rep. Dick Arme said this about the flat tax while speaking to the media in the Press Tent:

"...I believe in it. I intend to see it [become] the law of the land. And I intend to do that by going around the country and getting the American people to know it, love it, and demand it."

Presumably, once we are properly mind-control programmed by Rep. Arme, then we'll demand a flat tax to take wages from laborers. How quickly we forget that America was founded in part to free labor from being taxed at all. Thomas Jefferson said in his First Inaugural Address on March 4, 1801: (quoting)

(A) wise and frugal government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government.... (end quoting)

Far have we come from that form of government. Our public servants now function essentially as our masters, though they be but puppet-masters whose strings are pulled by the elite would-be kings of this world.

Dick Arme and Bill Tauzin would have us think this way or that way to part with our hard-earned pay. Are they simply performing a carefully planned script to divide and conquer us? After all, if we're talking about this plan or that plan, then we may miss the real problem—which in this case is the criminally-functioning I.R.S.

Anyone truly familiar with how the current income tax system works knows that it actually only applies to persons involved in the manufacture, sale, or distribution of alcohol, tobacco products, or firearms, and by clever extension to those who have been tricked into filling out a 1040 Form and, thus, voluntarily agreeing to be classified as if they were involved in Alcohol, Tobacco or Firearms. Remember, no one held a gun to your head, did they? Then you volunteered. If you don't believe it, then go to a law library and look at the Index to the Code of Federal Regulations (C.F.R.). There you will find the secret, the Parallel Table of Authorities. All of the authority of the I.R.S. to implement and enforce the income tax laws comes from Title 27 of the C.F.R.—Alcohol, Tobacco Products, and Firearms.

The real problem most likely is that people are figuring this perpetuated fraud out in record numbers, and so it now becomes incumbent upon Congress (lackeys for the Federal Reserve) to implement, as soon as possible, a flat tax, or a national sales tax, anything, just so long as it is totally unrelated to Alcohol, Tobacco Products, or Firearms, yet brings in the revenue our parasites-in-office need to survive.

The Bakersfield Business Conference of Elites went on and on, but this article will not. The conference was more akin to a mutual admiration society meeting than it was a forum for painting a real picture of our current state of affairs in America and the world. We are told the economy is booming, but they forgot to tell the hungry and tired masses, growing in numbers everyday.

I was left with the inescapable overall impression that the Conference stood in stark contrast to the millions of starving and homeless people around the world who have lost everything to those whom the Conference celebrated, those Elite One-World Controllers with seemingly insatiable appetites for everything the world has to offer, and more.

And oh, by the way, England now has a counterpart to the Conference. It is called the Yorkshire Business Conference, first held in May of 1995 on the grounds of Yorkshire's Harewood House, at the estate of the Earl and Countess of Harewood. Sir Henry Kissinger was one of the first guest speakers! Doesn't that just thrill you to the core?

Taking Stock Of Some Important Issues

10/19/97 #1 HATONN

WILL GOD DO IT FOR YOU—EVER?

You are not created to have someone else, even CREATOR, do anything FOR you. This is YOUR experience and the point of the journey is to see what you will do regarding your intentions, your circumstances and with what is offered unto you, IF YOU SEE IT. Why ever would God take away the wondrous self-esteem of doing something valid and wonderful in your own expression?

What God will do is point the way, show you the way, or go before you so that you don't fall from the pathway while accomplishing your own creations. Ask and it shall be given unto you, but you have to use whatever it is that is offered.

WHY CAN'T WE GET ALONG ONE WITH ANOTHER?

You quarrel and disagree because no two people are identical in receptions, backgrounds or interests. It is wonderful if two can get along well enough to form a family focus but it is rare that even that goes well.

But I do have to note that it is rarely pleasing for "new kids" to come onto the block only to start pronouncing your opinions and directions upon those who have done very, very well without you for years—so be careful, each of you, that you do not poke yourself into that which was not yours to correct, even if you have it right and others have it wrong. What I find is that you most often are CROSSING ME, if it be in my projection of work or writing.

I have told all from upstart that I have no intention of doing things like any other has done them and I refuse to allow any of my work to cause friction between parties having to set to print my information. We have played at that game far too many times to allow it to encroach upon your most precious time here and now.

How is it that during this our most incredibly burdensome time are there quarrels over parentheses and italics? I never cared a whit whether or not any Journal has/had an index in the end reference. If we write so that it is totally without use, then we will change; if not, we have no intention of changing anything. I write for my people and never for journalistic or grammatical purity according to the ideas of the rewriters of language. What is wrong already is that you change your language, word meanings, and never seem TO GET THE POINT of the contents. If you cannot work with that which we offer, don't work with it. There are no funds for such luxury as indexing in any event and, as we pass by "dated" material, it becomes less and less worthy of spending time or funds on it. Even Reader's Digest doesn't have an individual ending indexing of words or names in their periodicals. So, to bring this to our attention is absurd as we are trying to do whatever we can to bring wherewithal to get to our work—our REAL work. If you assume the "word" in our writings to be the point here, then let me correct your perceptions: I write for our people and their information and for no other reason. In fact, you will note that you are only getting in the CONTACT a very few public writings at all, and yet we write EVERY DAY, OR TWICE IF WE MISS a day.

I am not going to go by the rulebooks and I think that neither are the ones who work for almost no wages just to get a job done. We have a superb paper and the Journals are well received and I refuse to make anyone unhappy about their work OR THE CONTENTS AND STRUCTURES. We are NOT a publishing house and I don't want it ever even referred to as such. Don't you people realize the assaults that every slip of your lips or fingers brings upon US?

I am so grateful that the paper is flowing in our absence from the daily writing for we can't physically do more. Our job is to go where the possibilities lead and get our purpose into flow. One possibility is not enough for that one may well not bear fruit, so we need MANY, many possible rewarding circumstances. This requires 24 hours a day at the task without ability to weep over that which does not bear fruit. Is it too much to ask that the team simply make-do and get along while we are attending these other matters?

In addition to the ongoing tasks we have another filing from Horton, Abbott and Green in a case in which Abbott has been "kicked out", literally, from the case and the courtroom. So, we will attend it in some other approach.

Ray B. did a superb job on the case filed Friday. The clerks recognized the difference in paperwork but were actually very nice, called the supervisor and decided how to handle the case. It will please you as it did us to find that we were appointed Judge Coyle for the job of presiding over this new approach. We plan to march right through one after another of these opportunities without the expense of having attorneys bleeding us dry. You can do likewise—if you want to save your own bacon—AND BREAD. [Note from E.J.: My apologies to those in tapeland; as I read this today at the meeting I missed the marvelous humor. I have underlined it here in the hope that you all can enjoy His humor as much as we do.] Will Judge Coyle remember the US&P case? Of course, and that is what makes us so happy. He is going to get to see a dozen, at the least, of these filings, and some are eventually going to be against HIM and he will recognize that fact instantly. Will he rule against the people? Probably, but won't that be the worst mistake he ever made? This first one (case) is directly against Horn and Brent from the very first encounter in a courtroom in December (28), 1988. The clerks were pouring over the documents before the filers even got out of the lobby area. Do we enjoy such antics? No, but somebody had best give me some better insight before criticizing what we do have going.

Since we have had an additional filing from Betty's attorney, it appears she just doesn't have control of anything about her case. Keep reminding her of loss in such behavior and perhaps her eyes will open one of these days. [Betty Tuten; 8321 W. Sahara Ave. #1039A; Las Vegas, NV 89117-1874]

Our hearts go out to Ed Cleary in his time of great distress. Choices are sometimes not always the best approach; and what of Ann Beam who promised to help attend him if he would work with Leon? Well, word has it that she moved away some three weeks ago. What does this do with Leon and Esther? Well, perhaps Mr. Abbott would like to explain that case and try to explain how he has used, taken, and literally spent Leon's funds. They just this week filed one more case actually listing Schroepfer. How long do you have to be dead before you get off the theft list?

FUNDING AND JOHN DENVER'S MURDER

Now, what about financing and such? Well, we had a pretty good thing going on the movie, and we will get it done, but certainly things change. I felt John Denver would be THE one to build our motion picture around the songs of Windsinger, but the enemies of John Denver preferred to murder him. Yes indeed, murder. The little plane exploded before impact. That plane, by the way, has been tested for safety FOR YEARS right here, for these little "pushers" are the product of Mojave's Rutan. Denver has been costing the big boys a whole lot of money and giving massive indigestion to those controllers for several years now. Windstar, you know, was taken over by the Rockefeller Foundation a few years back in hopes of containing Denver. It didn't work. So, the man pays with his life while the remaining people do little token programs to his contributions to quality living.

The next batch of "roadkill" will have been established in Texas by the Baker Bunch who met last week. Will YOU be next? The game is getting ever so much hotter as the days pass.

WHAT OF CONTRACTS, GRANDMAS, AND RUSSELL HERMAN?

What about it and them? What was and is available is imperfect at best and Grandma has announced she never plans to see success in her lifetime. Well, that may or may not be since the big bad wolves continue to utilize the documents as if she doesn't exist. Some people are even using her own issued documents for themselves, and so be it for we go where angels suggest we do not travel.

What a lot of people do not understand is that one of our own was very close to Herman himself and Herman's petition was, to that person, to see to his portion and distribution, etc. That is over 48% or thereabouts to "we-the-people". Who are "we-the-people"? I thought you might well understand. And, "we-the-FIRST-people" are in the form of Native Americans! Further, we now are in contact and meeting with the major leaders of the Native nations. When the unity comes there will be no need for any resources other than what is built and set to function.

Let me remind you of something, however, and that is that the Native Americans DO NOT LIKE YOU PEOPLE—of any other color or race. They harbor great indignation over the Blacks who took up guns against the Indians in the name of the authority of their White owners. They have a camaraderie to the Hispanics because Hispanics ARE INDIANS. So too are the ancestors from Asia. Will they stake you invaders to the ant hills? Probably not, but they surely would enjoy the exercise.

Now, what does this do for other nations? Nothing, so please don't think a task is finished when you offer one single faction of "people" a possible way out of their dilemma.

So, what are we going to do? Whatever we can do in a positive and goodly manner of either assistance or interchange.

And what are you going to do while we are about our purpose and work? I don't know, besides quibble and confront. We can't have a working unit in this manner of push and pull and yet some get weary before the games even begin just from the thinking they can restructure and insert themselves into that which already is functioning.

What will we do? Nothing, but I remind all of you that it is most unpleasant to be sick, have to attend distant meetings and represent ME, and come back to the piles of tattlings and prattlings of negative nature. If you would spend a tenth the time on a response to Tuten and gang, how much the better it would be for all of us and give relief, perhaps, where relief is so badly needed.

Are you wrong in perceiving errors and commenting or confronting? I don't know because for some reason we have managed to make it to here with very little of anything except intent and willingness to do more for less every time the calendar rolls around.

I do, yes, suggest that E.J. perhaps is to bear some responsibility for the indexing problems for I said to "INDEX NO MORE BOOKS"—period. We are some 60-70 volumes behind in publishing, with no signs of change in that arena. We need to eat more than we need to calculate indexing costs. We are going to make it through this lean time beautifully if you will just pull as a team, be kind to one another, find good things upon which to take note, and give compliments instead of criticism. Find someone doing something RIGHT for a change and even you will feel ever so much the better for the insight.

We have again reached a sad point in our ongoing play here. Dharma doesn't want to come to a meeting today. The feelings seem so strong and so negative from some that the joy goes long before the actual task. She stayed home this morning to do this and get the meeting together when WE SHOULD HAVE BEEN IN LANCASTER ABOUT OUR FATHER'S BUSINESS MATTERS. This is unacceptable for when she is not present I cannot make myself recognized or have input except through simple thought projection which is rarely heard correctly. And, yes, I DO participate in meetings and we can run a two-day meeting schedule into a couple of hours. I don't have any difficulty making myself known, nor in others finding comfort in my presence. If YOU still have a problem, then I suggest you look very carefully at that fact. Are you embarrassed? Are you semi-conscious? Are you still looking for that which is NOT?

My team has to be willing to give up ALL control for the better working of any circumstance and we do so gratefully for the assistance of learned and wise business men. We are making efforts to bring freedom back to a nation without bloodshed or war. This seems worthy, for a day's work, to us. We have to let go of selves and LET GOD. Is this not far easier than trying to run everything according to your own wishes?

When you strive too hard for perfection in others, you will find that you have developed very visible and obvious imperfections in self. Be careful for your need is NOT OUR DEMAND OR COMMAND.

It is so important to sit with self and ponder upon these things which distract and annoy for we find so much to attend in that silent understanding with self. Some people think with their mouths, some think silently and without any possibility of allowing another to see their shortcomings, and others write so that their own opinions are there for posterity, good or bad. I don't have anything to assist in your own decisions about which approach is best, but sometimes it is certainly wise to allow things to simply move on past lest we be assisting at someone else's pain and offended self-esteem. Some people have so little self-esteem and proffer only insecurity to the point of destruction to themselves. These are the lessons I would have more time to teach and converse about if we can move on to those days of simple wine and roses without burden, except for that grabbed-for moment in time. My purpose, however, does not allow the luxury of such limited teachings.

And for you who have waited and waited, yes, Little Crow is participating in every important meeting of introduction for it is upon his own insight and wisdom that others can base their own responses to such as me. We always have to get on past the religion vs. spiritual truth, and a lot of people get their noses out of joint if we suggest that one is of man and the other of God.

Little Crow, in this crossing, doesn't have time for great warring, money gathering, and physical druthers. He is of the Great Council of Eagles and he must attend the Wisdom Keepers while other things can be worked out on a worldly plane of expectation and growth, sans the bloodletting and inter-tribal nipping at one another. Little Crow is one of the last of the great Oral Tradition Keepers and Presenters of that wondrous TRUTH. He must continue while others do the physical changing for they have lost the meaning of the full presentation of that Oral Tradition. Most have become totally addicted to the human physical experience and have forgotten what made them greater than other human-kind. The elders are now getting ancient and weary and ever wary of any introduction of possible changes which have thus far resulted in pain and more deprivation.

Are the Natives restless? Oh indeed. We find that we knew of some 554 tribes only to find that there are well over 2,500 tribes who call themselves by different names. Does this indicate unity in all things? Certainly not; and thus comes the separation and conquering capability of the enemies among them.

The next thing you find is that some of the tribes, with what seems to be the most aggressive modernizing of their lands, have simply made deals with the powers that be and this is from gaming to banking. These are the things we have to see and know lest we bumble into ambush, and yet, if we experience not the possibilities, how can there ever be change for a better environment and world status? Are each of us to blame for the errors that came before us? No, only for FURTHERING the concepts and errors.

You become totally hung up on race, color, creed and nationality when, if 10 men and women of every sort smeared blood on the table before you and you had no microscopes or chemical testing, you could not tell one from the other. When will you learn that God is not White—HE IS LIGHT? You couldn't tell the difference even with testing unless there is some special thing "amiss" in any of the blood which indicates a specific racial characteristic.

I am always amused by the old adage that "the squeaking wheel gets the grease". This would seem pretty good to some, I suppose, but it seems to me that more often the perpetually squeaking wheel gets tossed out for yard decorations or junk-heap placement. God speaks and responds in the small wee voice of, often, silence. Squeaking indicates a friction-rub taking place which is left unattended by the wheel itself. Every individual, moreover, is only interested in their own friction blisters and not in yours. Make a big deal of it and you may well find your blisters getting larger and larger.

You will find that people are kind but they do not feed well on your shared infirmities—unless, of course, they just want to share their own as well. I suggest that if you can't eat—don't. I further suggest that if you have other problems, possibly don't speak of them lest they bore the other into leaving you COMPLETELY alone to revel in your misery. If, however, you find another who also revels in misery—join them—and revel to your heart's content. We have other things to do. If you are infirm, then do the best you can and keep moving along as well as is possible lest you find your wheels not just squeaking but actually "freezing". It is up to you alone to decide about your condition and you can't wait to find what another is willing to do for you, even if that other is a physician who claims to know it all. You know what you need if you will but move within and find what's eating you, lest you blame something you are eating for your plight.

Am I cruel? I suppose, if that is what is meant by allowing God, and other, to come to decisions regarding them. If a person wishes suicide, who are you to butt in, except to offer your support of life? If that other goes away, allow yourself to fully release that party and check out that you don't run off to bury that "other" who has already departed while those other dead entities around that one could enjoy doing same without your input—save probably paying the expenses. Be careful on that which you bite and chew for perchance the lessons are NOT FOR YOU.

This is a time of great transitions and migrations and it is not yours to know about any other than self. I would hope that you would find this worthy input and not simply some other perception over which to dawdle and argue for, at best, the offerings of speakings can only be from personal opinion in perception.

Can I use a better example? Yes, I think so. Did you, Ekkers, or somebody else give Cleary cancer of the colon, if that be his problem? No, but he certainly did everything he could to destroy and give terminal cancer to the Ekkers and some of you nice people in this area. Is judgment, or joy, sorrow, or pain your responsible response? Why? Do you think piously because you believe God is only pious? When things are set to straight then and only then is attention or anything else showered on the various entities surrounding your ongoing experiences. Love the man, but it is foolish indeed to not judge actions lest you bury yourself in the mire of further lies and trappings. Leave those silly and nonsensical things to those who have time and little work to be achieved in a positive direction. Forgiveness HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH IT. Please realize the difference in forgiveness, forgetting, and wise response to each encounter. He who would blame "you" for his infirmities is again placing blame on every wrong perception, save himself. Whatever you bring upon yourself is that which is laid forth in your own demanding. It is called universal truth in cause and effect. If you wish to continue to eat I suggest that you choose not to bite the hands and hearts of those who feed you, literally. Truth changes not—only perceptions, yours included, change according to opinions formed and, sometimes worse, as laid down by misfits and gossips.

I, for one, am tired of feeding my adversaries. I would far rather support and feed Audrey's and Eric's animals who have no other hands to feed them. Further, for their information, we plan to do that abundantly as soon as we can achieve some conclusion in positive manner. It is ours to attend God's creatures who cannot fend for themselves, not attend and attend and bow and scrape to the self-centered would-be rulers and controllers who gossip their way through everyone's opinions. The fallen sparrow is far more precious to God for attending than the self-righteous would-be clown/king who brings hurt upon himself for his narrow perceptions and ongoing king-dumb-ship.

Moreover, when the masses bring two entities into the same slot of perfection as a Princess Diana and a Mother Theresa—there is something badly wrong in Camelot. And, if you have to ask why, I pity you. Does this diminish Diana? No, it only diminishes your own credibility of reality in perception. The people of the world wish to live in fairyland where princesses live happily ever after and, believe me, that IS fairyland. And, while you are paying attention ONLY to these things, the world goes right on moving faster into deterioration as the things and actions of the would-be controllers make hay out of your focus on the rainstorm.

Millions of people are dying of famine in Korea and yet you spend your time on tributes to the very ones who allow them NO FOOD [See, for example, Ray Bilger's excellent report on this year's pompous Bakersfield Business Conference, on page 15]. When will YOU BE NEXT? Soon, good buddies, soon.

Let us leave this now for there is much to do and little time to get it accomplished. We need to report to Africa and Europe, but I don't see time to do it now, so let us just move on as we can.

I do suggest that the team follow up on the morrow so we know where we are as nearly as can be determined. I am especially sure you will want a report from the Philippines at the earliest possible time.

We send our most loving regards to the Rays and Jack who served beyond expectations in a hard and emotional center of confusion and endless harassment. God does not miss those contributions, and may you KNOW as much. People insist on making their own beds and putting hot coals within the blankets to insure their own burning. If he, anyone, would simply take the abundance of God's offerings to build mansions unto self and be the would-be-king of the hill, there is error involved which simply will not work, for the promise of God is to fulfill the missions and promises unto His own team and workers who expect and move toward receiving of those gifts sought constantly.

This week I had an amusing happenstance come my way. I offered abundance to a person who just looked shocked and couldn't even pronounce the numbers. I reminded him that this was for that which he prayed EVERY DAY. Be careful for that which YOU pray—you just might get it and then what are you going to do with that big mouth filled with promises which you never expected to have to deliver?

And do, dear ones, PAY ATTENTION. How many of you noticed the big fire in Credit Lyonnais Bank in Paris. Ah, indeed, it was the SECOND and this one only burned records regarding the rip-off operations. Two in one year is quite interesting, don't you agree? And where were you? Glued to the tube, watching flowers being strewn on the Princess's fence posts. How many times do you REFUSE to hear the messages given for you, specifically? Obviously a lot, or you wouldn't keep asking for that which has already been given.

Salu, and may the life you live begin to be your own.

To see a world in a grain of sand,
And a heaven in a wild flower,
To hold infinity in the palm of your hand,
And eternity in an hour.

—Blake, Auguries of Innocence

TELEPHONE HOTLINE

805-822-0202

As an adjunct to CONTACT, the Telephone Hotline keeps you as informed as possible on current events and other important information that needs to get to our subscribers before our publishing date.

The message machine will answer after 2 rings if there are any new messages for that day, and after 4 rings if not. Thus daily callers can hang up after 2 rings and save toll charges if no new message has been recorded. If the Hotline does not answer your call, then that means there is currently no Hotline message.
